EKAE thwarts takeover attempt, readies for restart

Investors line up against Arizona board member's effort to oust directors

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - Investors of East Kansas Agri Energy turned back an attempted hostile takeover of the company's board of directors at their recent annual meeting and heard company management announce a September 3 date that the shuttered plant would begin taking corn shipments to once more start producing ethanol.

The corn delivery date was the first official report to investors regarding the reopening of the plant, which board chairman Bill Pracht said would come some time later in September.

EKAE ended production of ethanol last fall after the hardest of two back-to-back drought years that decimated the region's corn crop. The company remained open although it laid off the majority of its production staff and other related positions and mothballed the production centers of its plant. Pracht said the remaining staff had used the year of downtime to perform maintenance and conduct a handful of upgrades. He said the plant would bring back 24 production employees when it reopened.

But by far the biggest news of the gathering and the topic that brought a record crowd of some 300 members to the meeting was the turning back of what began as an effort by one of the board members to throw

The East Kansas Agri-Energy ethanol plant is expected to take its first official corn delivery on Sept. 3, marking the restart of the plant after it was shuttered last year because of a poor corn crop.

Commissioners decline to sue county attorney

Identity of person who sent illegal postcards remains a mystery

BY VICKIE MOSS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - County commissioners said yesterday they'd like to know who the mystery person is who conducted a secret ad campaign against the Anderson County Hospital bond issue last spring, but they're not willing to try an unconventional lawsuit against their own county attorney to find out.

Commissioners told Anderson County Review Publisher Dane Hicks, who last month requested the commission sue county attorney Brandon Jones to disclose the person's identity, they weren't willing to go so far as to file the lawsuit because in effect they would be suing themselves.

"I'd like to know who it was too," said Second District Commissioner Jerry Howarter, "but I'm not in favor of suing ourselves."

County counselor James Campbell said there were any number of problems with the commission instigating a lawsuit against the county attorney. He said the expectation of success in court would be low and filing the suit against one of its own county offices might also

County taxes up by 6 mills to pay for new hospital

Commissioners hold line on most budget items, despite challenges

BY VICKIE MOSS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - Most Anderson County taxpayers will not be surprised to learn that their property taxes will increase by more than 6 mills in 2014. And most local taxpayers won't be surprised to learn that their taxes increased in order to pay for a new $25 million hospital, approved by voters earlier this year.

What may surprise taxpayers, however, is how closely Anderson County Commissioners were able to stick to last year's budget as a guideline when preparing the 2014 budget, despite increases in employee salaries and health insurance premiums.

The county's total tax rate for 2014 is 92.71 mills, up more than 6 mills from 2013's rate of 88.558. That increase includes a mill levy of 6.053 for bonds and interest for the new hospital. Without the hospital bonds, county commissioners raised taxes by 0.101 of a mill.

In nearly every department, county commissioners increased budgets for personnel expenses. But by holding the line on other expenses in

Bank robbery attempt likely to result in plea deal

Suspects say they want to make a plea deal with feds

BY VICKIE MOSS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

KANSAS CITY, KAN. - Two men who were arrested after a shootout with law enforcement officers following a botched bank robbery attempt in Kincaid likely will reach some sort of plea bargain with the federal court.

Documents filed in federal court in Kansas City, Kan., show the case has been put on hold while prosecutors and attorneys for the defendants attempt to reach a plea agreement. The attorneys informed the court of their decision to plea the case late last month, and no further court hearings have yet been scheduled.

Daniel Lee Waddell, 28, of LaRussell, Mo., and Stephen Michael Hudson, 32, of Webb City, Mo., are being held in federal custody in connection with the charges. Each is facing a federal charge of bank robbery, having been accused of trying to rob the Citizens National Bank March 6. Their efforts were thwarted by security measures at the bank.

It is not known what type of penalty the men could face from the plea bargain. A conviction on a federal bank robbery charge could bring up to 20 years in a federal prison and up to $250,000 in fines.

Waddell and Hudson were arrested after a high-speed chase and shootout with law enforcement officers on K-7 Highway north of Mound City. One of the suspects was slightly injured by bullet fragments or glass, ending the shootout.

The men were charged with attempting to break into the Citizens National Bank in Kincaid earlier that day. Someone saw a man shaking a

Local jobless rate increases

Seasonal jobs could be reason why county's unemployment spikes

BY VICKIE MOSS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

TOPEKA - After months of reports that showed more people in Anderson County were finding jobs, the county's unemployment numbers took a dramatic jump in the other direction.

Anderson County's unemployment rate increased to 7.0 percent in July, up from 6.2 percent in June and one of the few times in the past couple of years that the jobless rate has increased. Overall, Anderson County had 295 unemployed workers out of a labor force of 4,213. The rate was slightly higher than last year's July unemployment rate of 6.9 percent.

Other area counties saw unemployment numbers either decrease or posted very slight increases, so it was not known why Anderson County's jobless rate rose so dramatically. However, seasonal employment was blamed for the increased unemployment rate statewide. "Over the past three months we have observed an increase in the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate," said Lana Gordon, Secretary of Labor. "Part of the

Database helps 'trace' stolen ag, construction equipment

Sheriff says program helps farmers when items are stolen

BY VICKIE MOSS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - Anderson County's law enforcement agencies will have another tool to help local agriculture producers when an expensive piece of equipment is stolen.

The county recently agreed to participate in TRACE - Theft Reports of Agriculture and Construction Equipment. The program was developed by the Johnson County Sheriff's Department and offers a free database to track stolen equipment.

The theft of heavy farm and construction equipment like tractors, backhoes and skid-loaders can be an expensive loss for owners and insurance companies, Anderson County Sheriff Vern Valentine said. Such equipment is a prime target for thieves, however, because of its high price tag and demand on the black market. Valentine gave an example of a hypothetical tractor worth $100,000 that is left overnight in a field; a thief can load up the tractor, ship it across country or even overseas and sell it on the black market. Even if shipping costs on the hypothetical tractor were $20,000, the thief still makes a profit of $80,000.

The TRACE database allows owners to quickly register their stolen equipment, which can

Bond Payment

David Arteberry with George K. Baum, James Campbell, County Counselor, Dena McDaniel, Treasurer, Rodney Burns, Auditor, and Molly Hoffman, Deputy Clerk, all met with the commission concerning the payments on the new hospital bond. Rodney stated the county could set up another fund to monitor the payments from the hospital and the outgoing payments for the bond. James Campbell stated that the hospital would like the money put in a separate bank account. Discussion was held on setting up a MIP account and the payments will be made electronically. Molly questioned that if these payments could be made electronically, why we couldn't make all the other bond payments electronically. She is currently writing checks for all payments and they have to be at the state treasurer twenty days before their due date. Electronically submitted payments are by three days before. Hicks read a portion of email correspondence from Melissa Wangeman, an attorney for the Kansas Association of Counties, whom Hicks said he had contacted regarding his proposal. A copy of the email was provided to the Review.

"I would agree it's probably legally allowable although a bit complicated," Wangeman's email read. "There may be a question of whether the BOCC (Board of County Commissioners) has 'standing,' what is their interest in seeing the record?"

"If I were advising the BOCC, and I am not- they have James Campbell for that," Wangeman said, "I would recommend not suing myself."

Hicks' request stemmed from an anonymous campaign mailer distributed in the days leading up to a public vote on a proposed $25 million new hospital question in April. State election laws require campaign materials and advertising be attributed to an individual as organization treasurer or other identifiable person. Automated "robo-calls" were also made on behalf of the those opposing the bond question which were also not attributed per state election law.

Jones investigated a complaint about the issue and determined the identities of both an anonymous printing company which sent the mailer to a Johnson County printer/mailer as well as an individual who paid the bill for the mailing. That person said yet another person actually gave them the money to conduct the mailing, but claimed he/she didn't know anything was illegal about the enterprise.

Jones told commissioners in June he determined the parties involved had no criminal intent and that he did not plan to file charges against them.

Hicks told commissioners whether or not the offenses were prosecuted the individual involved still is required to file campaign documents with the county clerk's office that detail the amount spent in political advocacy and the identity of the payer.

"No one can make the county attorney file those charges," Hicks said later Monday. "That's completely in his venue. But that person is required to file the same forms anyone else who donates money or pays on behalf of one side or the other of an election."

Hicks said he was required to declare a $1,000 in-kind advertising donation the Review made in support of the hospital bond issue and to file forms to that effect with the county clerk's office.

"If I have to file them and every one in every other election has to file them, why doesn't this person have to file it?," Hicks said. "The law requires you to be up front about who's supporting your cause and the public has a right to that information. The county attorney is withholding that information from the public."

Lawnmowers stolen from store

BY VICKIE MOSS

THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - A bold early-morning thief from a Garnett retailer has local police on the lookout for a lawnmower thief.

Someone saw a white man loading three lawnmowers into a maroon van a little after 5 a.m. Tuesday, Aug. 13, in the Alco parking lot in Garnett. The problem, however, was that the man wasn't a shopper. He was a thief, according to a report from Garnett Police Chief Kevin Pekarek.

The three lawnmowers were offered for sale at Alco, but were stolen rather than sold. A witness saw a man loading the mowers into the van, but the man was not located. Police continue to search for the suspect and the investigation continues.

of East Kansas" contended through ads in area newspapers and mailings to investors that EKAE had been mismanaged by the present board and that other plants in the country were still operating and earning money while EKAE was closed the past year. Board members countered that shutting down during the drought and preserving the company's war chest of cash was the best course and allowed the company to re-open without going into debt. Brittenham solicited investors to sign a petition calling for a special board meeting of EKAE which was originally set for August 17.

Negotiations between EKAE and Brittenham's "Concerned Members" resulted in the postponement of the special meeting and the abandonment of Brittenham's proposal for a new board slate, on the condition that Brittenham be placed on the ballot to retain his board post and that another member of Clean Energy Capital, Jonathan Henness, be placed up for election to the board as well. In an address to membership at the meeting, Brittenham said his and Henness' candidaties were intended to serve as a double-check on other possible actions of the board.

EKAE members voted for board candidates in the company's proposed slate each by a 2-1 margin over Brittenham and Henness. Incumbent board members re-elected to their posts include Don Meats, Greg Foote, and Kevin Mobley. Charlie Hughes, a former area banker and presently a State Farm Insurance representative living in Overland Park, was elected to fill the vacant seat left by the death of Garnett's Steve Doering.

those departments and by shaving about $5,000 out of the zoning department, the county's general fund was reduced by a total savings of about $6,159. That equals a tax rate reduction of about 0.109 of a mill in the general fund. The general fund is one of the county's largest expenses, and includes most departments and pays for the salaries of employees in those departments.

The road and bridge department also takes up a significant part of the county's budget, and it was increased by $68,000.

The largest increase in the county's budget was for employee benefits. That fund was increased by $73,000, primarily because of increases in health insurance.

For the most part, other county expenses like elections, the fair and extension council, mental health and other areas were relatively stable, although the budgets were up or down slightly.

The county's total operating budget for 2014 was estimated to be about $11,362,626, up from $9,460,450 in 2013. Of that, about $7,105,761 is expected to be raised from property taxes.

Voters approved building a new $25 million hospital to replace the aging 1949 facility in last April's election. Critics at the time complained about the high tax burden and questioned if there was another option. But proponents argued the costs to repair the current facility would exceed the cost of building new and that St. Luke's Health system, which operates the facility, would end up paying most of the construction costs through increased lease payments and other fees.

Taxpayers can discuss the proposed budget at a public hearing at 10 a.m. Sept. 9 at the County Commission Room in the county annex building in downtown Garnett.

reason of increases in the previous months was due to more individuals entering the labor force."

Three major industries reported statewide over-the-month job losses. Government lost 18,900 jobs, principally seasonal at the local level. Manufacturing, which had shown increases over the past several months, posted a decline in the last two months in seasonally adjusted jobs numbers. These numbers perhaps indicate a weakness in this sector. In July, Manufacturing lost 1,900 jobs and Education and Health Services lost 800 jobs.

Statewide, the unemployment rate was 5.9 percent, up from 5.8 percent in June 2013 and up from 5.8 percent in July 2012.

Work or Welfare: Modern dilemma

Safety nets of modern recession make for a disincentive to work

A sidebar observation as lingering impacts of The Great Recession continue is that social safety nets of not just traditional Welfare but also of the success of the prior generation have formed an economic disincentive for job seekers. Consider these recent examples:

- A representative for the regional Manpower office holds a job fair at the Garnett library in search of general laborers to staff jobs for multiple industries in Iola and Garnett. No one shows up during the entirety of the four-hour event.

- An Osawatomie nursing home advertises various shifts for LPN staff, but complains that applicants just won't apply in Miami, Anderson and surrounding commuter counties.

- Three applicants for open teaching positions in USD 365 turn down job offers in the district, telling interviewers they'd rather not work for now and hold out for something that might be better than to accept what USD 365 is paying.

Though the reasons and the motivations may vary, it's clear at least in these examples that even in a region with 6-8 percent lingering unemployment, there are apparently worse things to be feared among some workers than being out of work.

The degree to which that hesitance to accept a job – one that may be below someone's expectations – impacts other facets of the economy and slows a possible economic rebound is a question that begs more debate. But the phenomena experienced in the microcosm of Eastern Kansas seems to illustrate data recently compiled and released by the Libertarian Cato Institute.

Cato studied Welfare programs in all 50 states and determined the current system pays such high benefits that the program actually competes with private sector employment. In Kansas, Welfare recipients receive benefits averaging $12.74 per hour – all not subject to income tax – and the standard benefit package is more than 85 percent of the state's median salary of $30,836 per year.

In 33 states, total welfare benefits annualized pay more than a minimum wage job, and in 13 states pay more than $15 per hour. In 39 states, increases in the Earned Income Tax Credit and the addition of the Child Tax Credit and state-level equivalents of EITC make it possible for a person leaving Welfare to take a job paying slightly less than Welfare without a real loss of income. Welfare pays more than the average pre-tax wage for a teacher in 11 states, and more than the starting wage for a secretary in 39 states. In the three most generous states (Hawaii, Vermont and Massachusetts) a Welfare recipient can take home more than an entry-level computer programmer.

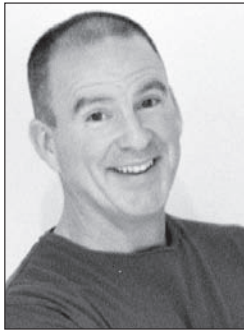

None of that is a judgmental indictment of Welfare recipients, but it does prove overall that in 42 states and the District of Columbia, Welfare benefits exceed the Federal Poverty Line. The disincentive for work created by those programs is ably apparent.

So too is an intangible safety net provided by parents, relatives or other working spouses in the degree of support lent to those who may be unemployed but not applying for standard Welfare programs. The concept of the single 25 year-old still living at home with mom and dad while continuing an unsatisfying job search comes to mind, but nowadays it may extend to young married couples or entire families.

That "benefit" is a testimony to stronger economies past, good stewardship by the older generation of their personal assets and their compassion and generosity. It is a phenomena not to be discounted, and no doubt serves to some degree as a disincentive to work.

There are more values to a job than just its payroll – the development of discipline, learning teamwork and how to function within an organization, ancillary skills and the basic ethic of work and loyalty to an organization to name only a few – the loss of which may be the most long-term damaging effect to the individual who puts off going to work. As long as the tangible benefits of not working compete with those of having a job, we can't blame some people for asking "why?"

Hillary's race card

BY RICH LOWRY

NATIONAL REVIEW

Anyone who doubts that Hillary Clinton is already in fine fighting trim for a presidential run should consider her speech to the American Bar Association in San Francisco.

She assailed an alleged "assault on voting rights." She took aim at the Supreme Court's recent decision striking down a portion of the Voting Rights Act and excoriated states that have recently tightened their voting laws. She declared that "anyone who says that racial discrimination is no longer a problem in American elections must not be paying attention."

Madam Secretary hasn't missed a beat. She knows that the calling card of Democrats in the Obama era is a polarizing politics that seeks to fire up minority voters by stirring fears of fire hoses and police dogs. Its basic vocabulary is imputations of racism; its evidentiary standard is low and dishonest; and its ethic is whatever works -- so long as it stirs fear and anger.

The latest target is the state of North Carolina, which is accused of soiling itself with a new voter ID law, among other changes in its election laws. "The Decline of North Carolina," harrumphs The New York Times. "North Carolina's Attack on Voting Rights," says The Daily Beast.

North Carolina's offense is joining the American mainstream. It is one of at least 30 states to adopt a voter ID law. Such laws enjoy broad public support. A Washington Post poll last year showed 65 percent of blacks and 64 percent of Latinos supporting voter ID. It is such a common-sense idea that such foreign redoubts of backwardness as Switzerland and Sweden require an ID to vote.

The constitutionality of voter ID isn't in doubt. The Supreme Court upheld Indiana's voter ID law in 2008 in a 6-3 decision written by now-retired liberal Justice John Paul Stevens. The evidence suggests that voter ID laws don't suppress the votes of anyone. Hans A. von Spakovsky, a voting expert at The Heritage Foundation, points out that major, dispassionate studies show no effect on turnout.

Hillary and the left will have none of it, though. North Carolina, in particular, is said to have exposed the nasty underlying agenda of voter ID.

It is cutting back on early voting, from 17 days to 10 days. There it is -- that must be disenfranchisement! But the state wants to make up for the reduced days with more sites where voters can vote early and greater hours of operation. (Despite the animadversions of The New York Times, New York doesn't allow no-excuse early voting -- surely because it is so hostile to minorities.)

It is ending same-day registration. Bingo! North Carolina hates black voters. But the majority of states -- again, including New York -- don't allow same-day registration.

You can certainly argue that election laws like those adopted in North Carolina are unnecessary or imprudent. You can't argue that they are a de facto return to the era of the poll tax. But Hillary is undeterred. Evidently, she is fired up and ready to go.

Get ready for the fun of a special session

This is the week that...hold your breath...members of the Kansas Legislature start thinking in earnest about just how—or whether—to make political points during the special session of the Legislature that starts next week.

Do they propose to amend that fix for the state's Hard-50 murder sentence that the U.S. Supreme Court says is unconstitutional because it allows a judge, not the jury, to decide whether the standard 25-year sentence can be doubled to 50 due to aggravating circumstances in the commission of the crime?

Do they let the Special Committee on Judiciary made up of House and Senate members put the microscope to Attorney General Derek Schmidt's proposed fix for the problem, then quickly pass it and head home in maybe two, not the governor's suggestion of three days?

Oh, there are political points to be made—or lost—here.

Long speeches that all come down to "tough on crime," proposed amendments that might eliminate the death penalty that hasn't been used in 40 or more years, or maybe just sitting quietly and voting yes and heading for the door so they can campaign on "getting business done."

There are political points to be made starting about now (yes, the 2014 campaign season is under way)—bullet-points on those campaign palmcards that we'll get at parades next year or maybe see carefully threaded between the screen and the door jamb.

Meanwhile, as legislators are consid-

So, with just a year before the next election, he's come up with a low-key PR move of his own...a new, pretty interesting-looking blog for his office (<http://kstreasurer.com/>).

Now, that's a step or two down the political excitement scale, but remember, state treasurers don't get famous for doing their job nicely. They just make the headlines when something goes wrong. Anyone remember former State Treasurer, and later governor, Joan Finney, who had a $15,000 check blow away while it was being carried to her office?

Well, since Estes now keeps state checks out of the wind, he works with what he's got. A lot of information about money: The state's and probably more politically important in an upcoming

I was just concerned about dogs being dumped in the country. At Tennessee and 1830 Roads I have seen dogs roaming that seem to be strayed or dumped. A little beagle dog, a black lab and possibly a German Shepherd mix- I'm just concerned about people dumping them in the country. They seem friendly and very hungry. I'm just concerned about it and I didn't know what to do in a case like that.

I was just wondering what the problem is with the city? They can't seem to mow the North Lake. The grass is several inches high and it looks awful. The South Lake has been mowed at least once since the North Lake but it still needs to be mowed also. Why do we have all the big mowers if we aren't going to use them? We can't expect people to use the parks if they aren't kept up. Thank you.

I have a question or an idea for somebody about the Lakes. Has anybody ever thought about having a big fish contest around here? What's the record fish ever caught in Anderson County? Need to have a fishing contest, open to adults too not just to the kids and see who's got braggin rights to the biggest fish. I hear a lot of tall tales but I ain't never seen no big fish from here. Thank you.

I'm not sure whose supposed to be taking care of this but there are a lot of trees and bushes growing in people's back yards that with all this rain and growing season have grown to the point that they're growing out into the alleys behind the neighborhoods. Branches are growing out so far that they're scraping on your car and banging on your radio antenna. If it's the property owners that's supposed to be doing this or the city I think somebody needs to get some pruners and spend an afternoon driving the alleys in our fair city.

Hmmm.... Get new boobs or make my house payment? Let's see...

Someone needs to keep the mowing up at the (deleted) church. Some nice person mowed part of it but there is still quite a bit to be mowed and it looks horrible. It is very tall and it does not look good at all.

Interestingly, he's promising a weekly rundown of the top 10 unclaimed properties of each county—that money that most of us have forgotten or didn't know we were given or eligible for. It will be one county a week, starting with Allen County, on the "Treasurer's Top 10 Tuesdays." Other days—"Money Matters Mondays," "Back to the Future Wednesdays," etc.—will look at debt management, higher education savings accounts and so forth. So far, on a poll on the blog asking Kansans which day's information they are most anticipating, the Tuesday segment is winning.

Now, we're thinking, looking at the unclaimed property tips is a pretty good use of time by legislators who have time on their hands during the special session (and after the special session, when they ramp up scouring for votes)...looking to see whether they have constituents who have money coming to them.

But, we're also wondering if they find a constituent with money due them whether they are going to mention Estes' name when they make that call from their House and Senate floor phones...

Back to School: Reading, writing and... walking?

TOPEKA – School supplies are bought and backpacks are ready. Parents have planned how their kids will get to school. But one thing parents might not think to do is talk to their children about walking there safely, particularly their teenagers. Here's why it's important: teenagers are now the most at-risk youth for pedestrian injuries, according to a study by Safe Kids Worldwide and FedEx.

The report "Walking Safely, A Report to the Nation", released in 2012, revealed that while walking safety has improved overall for children since 1995, there are still a staggering number of children hit by cars. More than 61 children are injured every day severely enough to seek medical attention. More than 500 children are killed every year in the U.S.

Interestingly, the most at-risk age group has shifted since 1995 when 5-9 year olds sustained the most injuries, to today when teens are at greatest risk. The death rate among older teens is now twice that of younger children. In the last five years, injuries among 16-19 year olds increased 25 percent over the previous five years. Today, 14-19 year olds account for half of all child pedestrian injuries.

"The work we have been doing with younger kids has clearly been effective," said Cherie Sage, Safe Kids Kansas. "But this new trend impacting our teenagers is disturbing."

One suspected cause of this disturbing trend is distraction, since the increase in teen injuries seems to correlate with the prevalence of cell phone use, both among walkers and drivers. A recent study issued by the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), also finds an alarming trend in injury risk involving distracted walkers.

"With approximately 75 percent of 12-17 year-olds owning cell phones, it's important to talk to your children about putting phones away and paying attention when walking," said Sage.

Safe Walking Tips

Safe Kids Kansas recommends these safety guidelines:

- Children should cross the street with an adult until age 10.
- Choose the safest route and walk it with children. Look for the most direct route with the fewest street crossings.

Children should take the same route every day and avoid shortcuts.

- Teach children to recognize and obey all traffic signals and markings.
- Make sure children look in all directions before crossing the street. If a vehicle is approaching, wave and make eye contact with the driver before crossing the street.
- Teach children to cross the street at a corner or crosswalk, never from between parked cars or from behind bushes or shrubs.
- Warn children to be extra alert in bad weather. Visibility might be poor and motorists might not be able to see them or stop quickly.
- Consider starting or participating in any existing Walking School Bus programs. Ask your school if they have a program. For more information about how a Walking School Bus works, visit walkingschoolbus.org.

- Talk to your teens about distractions. Cell phone use, whether texting, talking, or listening to music with headphones, can distract a pedestrian from seeing or hearing oncoming vehicles.

• Be a good role model. Children need you to not only tell them, but also show them how to be safe pedestrians.

Researcher says newer teachers most likely to be engaged at work

LAWRENCE – Conventional wisdom says experienced teachers are often the best teachers, right?

But KU researcher Shane Lopez says it might not be that simple.

According to Lopez, K-12 teachers with less than one year of experience are the most engaged teachers at work, at 35.1 percent, based on survey data. Engagement falls precipitously to 30.9 percent for teachers with one to three years of experience, and it falls further to 27.9 percent for educators with three to five years of experience. Engagement improves slightly for teachers with five to 10 years of experience (30.8 percent) and again for those teaching more than 10 years (31.8) but is still significantly lower than the first-year rate.

"For our nation, this means more than 2.5 million of our 3.7 million K-12 teachers are not bringing their best selves to work every day," said Lopez, a psychologist and professor of the practice in the KU School of Business and senior scientist for Gallup. "For parents like me, it means that four of my son's six teachers aren't fully engaged."

Lopez' findings are based on Gallup surveys of more than 7,265 American K-12 teachers, conducted in 2012.

There's some important context to these findings, Lopez explained. First, overall, teachers' engagement ranks high compared with other occupations. In fact, teachers rank No. 4 in engagement on a list of 12 different occupational categories measured in the survey.

Additionally, the pattern of teacher engagement dropping over time is not unique to the teaching profession. In fact, it exists in every non-teaching occupation group surveyed. But the size of the decline in engagement over time is greater among teachers than in other occupation groups. This is partly because new teachers have higher levels of engagement than new workers in non-teaching jobs. But it also seems to be the result of something specific to the teaching profession that causes teacher engagement rates to fall more dramatically than in other professions, Lopez said.

"The data suggest that teachers rank high in engagement among the 12 occupational groups because they are the most likely of all professions to say that at work, they have the opportunity to do what they do best every day and are more likely to strongly agree with the statement 'there is someone at work who encourages my development,'" Lopez said. "But despite having higher engagement than the national average, teachers are the least likely of all occupations to say, 'at work my opinions seem to count.' That latter statement could help explain the large decline in engagement over time."

The engagement findings are based on Americans' assessments of workplace elements with proven linkages to performance outcomes, including productivity, customer service, quality, retention, safety and profit.

Gallup's employee engagement index categorizes workers as engaged, not engaged or actively disengaged. Engaged workers are deeply involved in and enthusiastic about their work and actively contributing to their organization. Those who are not engaged are satisfied with their workplaces but not emotionally connected to them – and these employees are less likely to put in discretionary effort. Those workers categorized as actively disengaged are emotionally disconnected from their work and workplace, and they jeopardize the performance of their teams.

So what are the implications of these findings? According to Lopez, school leaders should make the most of the relatively higher engagement of today's newest teachers and support these educators throughout their careers to maintain this engagement. School leaders can focus first on selecting talented teachers and drastically improve the environment in which teachers and students work every day.

"A key choice educational leaders make is who to put in the classroom, which is why hiring and engaging great teachers is a vital step to school success," he said. "Engaged teachers not only challenge students to grow, they also encourage and engage their fellow teachers, building the foundation for great schools."

Identify southern rust in corn to minimize yield, profit loss

MANHATTAN -- Small, light brown, circular lesions covering corn leaves this time of year are not a welcome sight.

Southern corn rust, a fungal disease caused by the Puccinia polysora pathogen, begins to show up in Kansas around Aug. 1 each year, according to K-State Research and Extension plant pathologist Doug Jardine. Corn producers, particularly those who farm north of Interstate 70, should evaluate each field for the disease and determine if fungicide treatment is necessary and economical.

Jardine identified southern corn rust in Kansas for the first time in 2013 on Aug. 1 in McPherson County. He said he has since seen it in other north-central Kansas counties including Riley, Clay, Cloud and Washington, but there may be more cases other crop scouts have identified elsewhere.

The disease does not live year-round in Kansas, as it requires a live plant to survive. It lives mainly in southern Texas and northern Mexico, where temperatures allow corn to grow year-round, and it travels northward to the U.S. Corn Belt each summer. Because the disease is currently widespread in south central Nebraska, it would have had to blow over Kansas from those southern areas.

The negative impact of southern corn rust depends heavily on a number of factors:

- Weather forecast;
- Stage of crop development;
- Yield potential of the field;
- Amount of disease in the field; and
- Susceptibility of the hybrid.

Southern rust is favored by hot, humid conditions, which Kansas experienced in early August. However, mid-August temperatures cooled, which Jardine said slowed the spread of southern rust.

Although the recent weather has been a benefit to farmers, the stage of the corn might be a problem.

"The problem this year is corn was planted two to three weeks late," Jardine said. "This is a problem across the entire Corn Belt."

If corn is hit with southern rust and has not yet passed the soft dough stage—35 days before maturity—it may be beneficial for farmers to spray fungicides. Products containing a triazole mode of action are recommended.

If the corn is already in the denting phase of maturity, Jardine said producers probably won't see an economic benefit to spraying, as the rust likely won't affect the yield too much. He said much of south central Kansas has reached that denting stage of development already and likely won't need to be sprayed.

Jardine said corn producers should evaluate each field separately. If southern rust has hit a field of younger corn and the corn has good yield potential, spraying could be economical.

"There is some good corn this year, and some of it has 200 (bushel per acre) yield potential," Jardine said. "A field with a reasonable amount of rust could have 10 to 15 percent yield loss."

A 10 percent loss on a 200-bushel per acre yield is 20 bushels. If corn is at $6 per bushel, that could mean $120 loss per acre. Therefore, Jardine said, it would be economical to pay $30 per acre to spray that field.

Jardine said the worst-case situation would be to see an epidemic of southern rust early on that is not treated, and producers could see as much as a 30 percent loss. With the current cooler-than-normal August temperatures, though, that is not a likely situation this year.

Another tip for producers is to research how susceptible their corn hybrid might be to southern rust. Genetic resistance to southern rust is limited, with most hybrids rating 5 to 7 on a scale of 1 to 9 (1 being resistant). In Kansas, greatest yield losses to southern rust occur when susceptible hybrids are planted late or when the disease arrives earlier than normal. The crop that is two to four weeks behind and is more susceptible to southern rust should be examined very closely.

The K-State publication MF-3016, Corn Rust Identification and Management in Kansas has more information on southern rust, as well as common rust, and outlines the differences in identification and management of these two diseases.

Bucks rewarded to drivers who buckle up

Thousands of vehicles will be traveling the Kansas roadways during the Labor Day weekend. Many families will head out on one last camping trip or get-away as the school year begins. Safe Kids Kansas, State Farm and the Kansas Department of Transportation (KDOT) want to encourage families to buckle up and drive safely to protect their most valuable asset, their families.

This year, August 25 through September 7, a safety belt awareness campaign called "Bucks for Buckles" is being held in 37 cities across Kansas. One dollar bills are being distributed by local volunteers to drivers who have all occupants buckled up securely in their vehicle. Those riding unrestrained will receive educational materials about the effectiveness of seat belts and child safety seats in saving lives and reducing injuries.

"No one can predict when they will be involved in a motor vehicle crash, yet almost all of us will be involved in an automobile crash in our lifetime. In 2011, 382 people lost their lives on Kansas roadways and 50 percent of them were unbuckled," said Cherie Sage, State Director for Safe Kids Kansas. "The single most effective means of protecting the lives of you and your passengers is wearing seat belts and using appropriate child restraints every time you ride in the vehicle - even short distances."

According to the 2011 KDOT Safety Belt survey, only 83 percent of those surveyed ages 14 and older, were wearing their seat belt. This compares to the national average of 84 percent. In 2010, Kansas ranked 36 in the nation in seat belt usage.

"An average of 93 people die each day in motor vehicle crashes nationally; that's an average of one death every 16 minutes," stated Sage. "The lifesaving benefits of seat belts are real and increasing use can make a difference. It's such a simple thing and only takes a few seconds to buckle up."

For more information about safety belt or child safety seat use, call 785-296-1223 or visit www.safekidskansas.org, www.safekids.org and www.facebook.com/safekidskansas.

Richmond Museum closes soon

Labor Day weekend will be the final regular open days of the Richmond Community Museum for this season although the Museum will always open on request. Open hours Saturday and Sunday are 1-4 p.m. with no admission charge.

Museum visitors this summer have especially enjoyed a display prepared and loaned by Marvin and Pat Gretencord of Olathe, one of toy tractors matched with names of farmers in the area who owned that same model real tractor.

The baby cradle made by Chris Barhan in 1877 and used by five generations of the Barhan-McCall-Hadsall-Smith-Frank and Deter families is one of the new items this season.

New archival materials are regularly added to the numerous albums labeled Veterans, Weddings, Richmond Grade and High Schools, the Richmond Fair and several other topics, Dennis Peters, Museum vice-president said, as he encouraged visitors to come to the Museum this weekend or later.

The Richmond Star quilt block on the outside of the building, part of the Franklin County Quilt Project, calls special attention to the building. The actual quilt made by Edith Hornberger in 2000 as part of a nation-wide project is displayed inside.

For a time to visit after September 1st., call Peters at (785) 835-6170 or Charles Prue at (785) 835-6583. The Museum is a great place for a class, club or family fieldtrip and visitors are encouraged to come through-out the year.

Card shower for former coach

A birthday card shower is suggested for a Richmond High School former teacher and coach who will be 97 on September 1st. Eugene E. Bump was hired by Principal French Booher in 1946 and remained at Richmond for 10 years. RHS students made some great woodworking pieces and had some championship basketball and baseball teams in those years.

Mr. Bump is widowed but his children, Barbara and Richard, and some grandchildren live not far from him. He enjoys hearing from his former students. His address is Eugene E. Bump, 13890 E. Marina Dr., Apt. 209, Aurora, CO 80014.

Devin Shrum is sworn in for another term with the Kansas Air National Guard. Shrum, a graduate of Anderson County High School, joined the Guard as a 17-year-old high school student and has completed six years of service.

Shrum re-enlists with Kansas Air National Guard

Devin Shrum has completed six honorable years of service with the Kansas Air National Guard taking him from the beaches of Mississippi to the Dunes of Qatar. Shrum embarked on his journey when he was a 17 year old high school student at Anderson County Senior High School. Leaving for basic training 12 days before his 18th birthday, he was the youngest one in his basic training group by a large margin.

After finishing basic training at Lackland AFB, Shrum went to Sheppard AFB for Tech School. While attending Tech School he took on the role of an Airman Leader. At 18 years old he was in charge of 300-400 Airmen in training. After leaving Tech School Shrum was assigned to 190th Air Refueling Wing, 190th Medical Squadron, Forbes Field, Topeka, Kansas. After just a few months, he was chosen to transfer into the 117th Operations Squadron and be a member of their Squadron Medical Element. Shrum climbed the ranks to his current position of Staff Sergeant (E-5). Shrum has held various positions and titles including President of the Junior Enlisted, EMT Instructor, and a Self-Aid Buddy Care Instructor.

As seen in the picture, SSgt. Shrum has chosen to re-enlist for another term with the Kansas Air National Guard. Shrum plans to transfer into the 284th ASOS in Salina, Kansas and cross train into a TACP position. SSgt. Shrum is married to Sarah with two children, Braden and Brilee. They make their home in Garnett. He is the son of Pastor David and Goldana Shrum of McLouth, Kansas. He is the grandson of Leon and Lois Shrum, Garnett and Vera, and the late Theron (Spike), Phillips of Garnett.

NSA issues reminder on CRP weeds

Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) participants are reminded that noxious weeds MUST be controlled on contract acres. Sericea Lespedeza and Johnson Grass are two common noxious weeds that cause compliance problems. Invasive trees on CRP, is another common compliance issue. This can result in a compliance violation if they exceed the height of the grass and exceed a 1% canopy of the area.

Please remember it is your responsibility to periodically inspect your CRP acres to ensure you stay in compliance with the provisions of your contract. Random spot checks are conducted annually to ensure proper maintenance of CRP acres. You should not wait for FSA to identify problems before you take necessary control measures. Compliance violations will result in CRP payment reductions or your contract can be terminated. If the violation warrants termination, all payments must be refunded from the time the contract started, liquidated damage penalties are added, and interest is charged from the date in which the applicable CRP payment was issued.

Contact the Anderson County FSA Office at 111 N. Maple, Garnett, KS or call 785-448-3128 for more information about CRP maintenance requirements.

Kansans focus on suicide awareness, prevention

TOPEKA - Kansas Department for Aging and Disability Services Shawn Sullivan and Kansas Department of Health and the Environment Dr. Robert Moser met Friday in Topeka's Memorial Hall with suicide survivors and family members of victims from across the state to highlight the need for strengthening suicide prevention and awareness efforts across the State of Kansas. Earlier in the day Governor Sam Brownback signed a proclamation designating September 8-14 as Suicide Prevention Week in Kansas.

They were joined by Chairman Wes Cole and members of the Governor's Behavioral Health Services Planning Council and its Suicide Prevention Subcommittee, which is co-chaired by Bill Art from the Johnson County Mental Health Center and Marcia Epstein from Headquarters Counseling Center in Lawrence. Ms. Epstein is program director for Kansas Youth Suicide Prevention services across Kansas. Also present were Chaplain John Potter with the Kansas Army National Guard and representatives from the more than 10 grass-roots suicide-prevention organizations operating in Kansas.

"We are here to acknowledge the seriousness of this problem and to demonstrate our shared commitment to working in support of increased awareness and prevention to reduce suicide - and one day eliminate it -- in Kansas," Secretary Sullivan said. "Nearly 400 Kansans die by their own hand each year, leaving behind countless bereaved loved ones and friends."

Suicide is the 10th leading cause of death in our country - and among young people between the ages of 15 to 24, it is the third leading cause of death.

"The impact of suicide on survivors such as spouses, parents, children, family, friends, and co-workers is gravely significant, both immediately and over the long term," Secretary Sullivan said. "But suicide is a public health issue, and it is largely preventable."

"Too many Kansans die by suicide each year - our sons, daughters, moms, dads, friends, people we used to sit next to at church, co-workers, people we saw around town. The impact of suicide is huge, confusing and painful. And although suicide is never someone else's fault, those left behind often feel so guilty," Ms. Epstein said.

"Suicide prevention is truly everyone's business. There is room at this table for all of us. Each of us can make a difference, through kind words and more. With awareness and effective tools, we will bring about a change," she said. "I ask you to start with these simple tools. One, ask the question, 'Are you thinking about suicide?' when you feel concerned about someone. Two, make the call. Free, caring, skilled support and guidance is available by calling Headquarters Counseling Center at 785-841-2345 or through the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 800-273-8255."

Over the years, Kansas has made progress in addressing suicide and has launched several initiatives, including:

- Creation of the Kansas Youth Suicide Prevention Resource Center funded by the Garrett Lee Smith (GLS) Grant to Headquarters Counseling Center in Lawrence.
- The Governor's Annual Kansas Suicide Prevention Week Proclamation
- Expansion of Suicide Prevention Coalitions in to seven urban, rural and frontier communities across the state, with five new coalitions forming.
- Free, 24/7 suicide prevention hotline access to over 5,000 children, teens and adults in 2012.
- Bereavement supports to survivors of suicide loss through Kansas Suicide Support Groups.
- Expansion of Suicide Hotlines to two community mental health centers - Wyandot and Johnson County.
- Increased availability and usage of suicide data from KDHE Vital Statistics

Increased awareness of the link between problem gambling and suicide risk

Increased information sharing among stakeholders and other Governor's Behavioral Health Services Planning Council subcommittees via e-mail on suicide prevention updates, resources, webinars, etc.

Understanding of the importance of trauma-informed care to reduce suicide risk. This means providing treatment that is based on each individual's personal experiences, as well as their behavior.

A strong Kansas presence at national, state and local conferences and workshops on suicide prevention

"A great deal of credit goes to the Governor's Behavioral Health Services Planning Council and its Suicide Prevention Subcommittee, as well as all the hard-working community-based Suicide Prevention Coalitions in Kansas that championed many of these efforts at the state and local levels," Secretary Sullivan said. "Through a coordinated and comprehensive approach that includes, prevention, standardized screening, assessment, risk reduction, and evidence-based interventions we can continue to build on what we've accomplished so far."

1993: Fourth cow mutilation reported

September 2, 2003

It was a series of mechanical problems and the intense demand for electricity for air conditioners and cooling units that fried the city's electric system during the Aug. 23 blackout, city manager Rick Doran said last week. Doran told a group of aggravated city residents and business people he planned to meet with city utility staff and other analysts to determine a way to minimize the chances of another power outage that blacked out most of the city in the midst of 100-plus degree temperatures.

A new group has formed in Garnett as an outgrowth of the Walker Art Committee, which hopes to support fine arts programs at Anderson County High School and help elevate those programs to the community. Garnett's Friends of the Arts was formed at an ad hoc meeting of the Walker Art Committee about a year ago, but recently reformed its efforts with an aim of raising local awareness and support for music, drama, forensics and other fine arts.

Local taxing districts will get a boost next year when the Taylor Forge manufacturing building south of Garnett comes back onto the tax rolls after 10 years under tax exemptions through Industrial Revenue Bonds. The move will place the facility back on city, county and school district tax rolls to the tune of a $245,260 appraised value.

September 2, 1993

After a busy month covering about 20 accidents, the Anderson County Sheriff's Department reported on just one case involving the theft of equipment this week. A rural man reported the loss of an 80 bushel cattle creep feeder from one of his pastures. The theft occurred from a pasture located two miles south and one-half mile east of Welda.

Anderson County's fourth cow mutilation since February was reported to the Anderson County Sheriff's Department Wednesday. A cow had been found mutilated early Wednesday morning in Jackson Township. The cow had died earlier Tuesday, and the owner moved it to a location about 100

by Vickie Moss
Staff Writer

yards away from the home by a road to be transported away. Sometime between darkness Tuesday and the early morning hours of Wednesday, the cow's sex organs were removed with a bladed instrument. The mutilation of the animal follows a pattern established in three previous cases of mutilation that occurred since February of this year. In the earlier cases, investigators believe the perpetrators killed the animals before mutilating them.

September 5, 1983

The soybean crop in Anderson County shows signs of a 40 percent loss, and milo that is mature is being harvested and has yields of 20 to 30 bushels per acre. The soybean crop loss comes on the heels of a corn crop that had a large percentage loss. The culprit, of course, is the weather. The drought has caused more severe damage in some areas than the drought of 1980, and the area has gone eight weeks without significant moisture.

Two buildings in Garnett were entered by a person or persons sometime Thursday night or Friday morning, and some merchandise was reported stolen from one of the buildings. Neal's Pharmacy was entered by prying the front door, and watches, lighters and drugs were taken along with some change. A person or persons also entered the office of Dr. James Kokoruda, a dentist, but nothing was reported missing. It also was entered by prying the front door.

A new site for the location of the Welda Post Office is being sought by the United States Postal Service. The preferred location is within a one-quarter mile radius of the present postal facility, and should measure about 100 by 150 feet.

Flags note targets in metal detection

My hope for this week's picture is to show you what I want to relate to you. As most of you already know, I was assigned to the Metal Detector survey team/crew at this year's Kansas Archaeology Training Program Field School 2013. Our team was under the direct supervision of Nancy Arendt of Colby, Ks. Nancy is also the current President of the KAA (Kansas Anthropological Association).

for local archeology information.

This photo was taken of a small triangle area we metal detected on the North edge of the Smokey Hill Trail. Every flag you see, represents a metal target we had discovered during our survey. This survey was conducted by using the ALL metal setting on our metal detectors. Only on one or two occasions did we use the discriminate mode settings. This picture was taken during a rest or lunch break. Notice the shovels and metal detecting equipment left in the field.

We not only got to locate these metal targets, but we were able to excavate the artifacts themselves. All artifacts were left in place as found, and then Julie Steppnick our Recorder would photograph, collect, bag and log each item. Approximately 98 percent of all targets recovered were from the 1800's. This picture shows only one of the many sites we worked during this Field Training School.

Note: See all the limestone fence posts in the background still being used today.

KHP participates in DUI crackdown, special traffic enforcement

The Kansas Highway Patrol will be joining other local law enforcement agencies from across Kansas to work extra hours during the You Drink. You Drive. You Lose. Special Traffic Enforcement Program (STEP). The STEP campaign runs from August 15, through the Labor Day weekend, until September 2. The additional enforcement efforts are underwritten by a grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation (KDOT). During STEP, there will be additional enforcement of all Kansas traffic laws, with particular focus on impaired driving laws.

If you are involved in a crash in which alcohol is a contributing factor, according to KDOT, you are two-and-one-half (2 1/2) times more likely to be injured and four-and-one-half (4 1/2) times more likely to be seriously injured or killed, than if you were in a crash in which alcohol was not a factor. The ratio of death to injury in alcohol-related crashes is almost four times higher than the death to injury ratio for non-alcohol related crashes.

"The last thing we want to investigate on our highways is a fatality crash involving someone's family member. We hope that everyone will remember to designate a sober driver, not just this weekend, but all of the time," Colonel Ernest E. Garcia, superintendent of the Kansas Highway Patrol, said.

"Troopers and other officers will be out in force over the next few weeks, and we hope this contributes to a safer time for all of those utilizing our Kansas roads."

Over the 2012 Labor Day holiday reporting period for the Patrol (KHP stats only), troopers worked four fatal crashes on Kansas highways, resulting in four deaths. One of the fatal crashes was alcohol-related. There were four total impaired driving crashes worked by KHP. The Patrol arrested 39 people for impaired driving. Personnel also assisted 1,193 motorists who needed help on Kansas roads. The reporting period for the Labor Day 2012 weekend ran during a portion of the STEP period, and ran from 6:00 p.m. the Friday prior to the holiday, through midnight the Monday of the holiday.

If you need assistance on a Kansas highway, or if you suspect an impaired driver, the Patrol asks that you call *47 (*HP) for KHP dispatch, or *582 (*KTA) if you are on the Turnpike.

Where does God fit in your life?

In Luke 14 Jesus is eating at the house of a prominent Pharisee and he relates a parable that illustrates the gracious invitation of God. A certain man was preparing a great banquet and invited many guests. At the time of the banquet he sent his servant to tell the guests that everything was ready. But they all began to make excuses. The first man had to go and see a field he had purchased. The second was on his way to pick up five yoke of oxen he had purchased and the third man had just gotten married.

Evidently those invited accepted the original invitation. A second invitation when all was ready was customary. When the servant returned and reported to the master he became angry and said to the servant, "Go out quickly to the streets and the lanes of the city, and bring in the poor and crippled, blind and lame. And the servant said Sir, what you have commanded has been done and still there is room." The master then instructed the servant to go out to the highways and hedges and compel people to come in that his house could be filled. The master then said "none of those men who were invited shall taste my banquet."

Jesus told this parable to illustrate to the Pharisees their transparency and dishonesty. The parable illustrates how man puts material things, business and occupation and family ties and social relationships ahead of God. The Pharisees had the appearance of godliness but denied its power. Jesus always related his parables in the hearing of both the religious establishment and to those the religious establishment felt were unworthy. The poor and crippled, blind and lame. Yet it was this group of people that Jesus was able to reach. They were given ears to hear. The Pharisees were unwilling to admit their need of anything besides religion. They were at ease in Zion. They had control and power and when Jesus made statements like the last shall be first and the first shall be last in his Kingdom they felt threatened and this put them at odds with Jesus.

Jesus concludes in this parable to the elite of Israel, who reject the Messiah, that they will not be given a second chance. Each of us must decide our level of service and commitment to God's Kingdom. However keep in mind there is a different reckoning in heaven than here on earth.

David Bilderback: A Ministry on the Holiness of God.

Controlling volunteer wheat an important step in protecting crop

MANHATTAN - The recent wet weather through much of Kansas has caused volunteer wheat to emerge and grow rapidly, said Jim Shroyer, K-State Research and Extension crop production specialist. Wet soil conditions may keep producers out of the fields for an extended period, or result in multiple flushes emerging, making it even more difficult than usual to control the volunteer.

To protect the state's planted wheat crop, volunteer wheat must be controlled, Shroyer said.

"Volunteer wheat within a half-mile of a field that will be planted to wheat should be completely dead at least two weeks before wheat planting," he said.

Volunteer wheat that emerges during the summer and is still present when planted wheat emerges creates numerous problems for the crop. Shroyer and K-State Research and Extension entomologist, Jeff Whitworth, reviewed some of the most serious potential problems.

Wheat streak mosaic and associated viruses - The most important threat from volunteer wheat is the wheat streak mosaic virus complex, which is carried by the wheat curl mite. In most cases, infection can be traced to a nearby field of volunteer wheat, although there are other hosts, such as corn, millet, and many annual grasses, such as yellow foxtail and prairie cupgrass. Control of volunteer is the main defense against the wheat streak mosaic virus complex.

Hessian fly - Hessian flies survive over the summer on wheat stubble. When the adults emerge, they can infest any volunteer wheat that may be present, which will keep the Hessian fly population alive and going through the upcoming crop season.

Barley yellow dwarf - Volunteer wheat is a host of barley yellow dwarf virus, and the greenbugs and bird cherry oat aphids which carry it. In that respect, destroying volunteer helps reduce the reservoir for the barley yellow dwarf viruses. The aphids have to pick up the BYD virus from an infected host plant first in order to become a carrier that can transmit the disease to wheat.

Russian wheat aphid - This aphid can also infest volunteer wheat during the summer and move onto planted wheat in the fall.

Another reason to control volunteer is that volunteer and other weeds use up large amounts of soil moisture, Shroyer said. When water storage is important, such as in summer fallow, volunteer must be destroyed.

For those reasons and more, all volunteer wheat should be completely killed within a half-mile of wheat fields at least two weeks before planting, Whitworth said.

"It is important to wait two weeks after the volunteer has died before planting wheat. This will allow enough time for any insects or mites present on the volunteer wheat to leave the area or die before the new wheat emerges," the K-State entomologist said.

Destroying volunteer after the new wheat emerges is too late, he added. Producers should leave enough time to have a second chance if control is incomplete.

Where there is a heavy stand of volunteer, some producers may be tempted to leave it and graze it out or even harvest the grain next summer rather than kill it out and plant a new crop this fall. That's not a good idea, Shroyer said.

"The best option is to control the volunteer, then plant a new crop of wheat two weeks later rather than leave the volunteer for grazing or harvest," he said. "This will protect you planted wheat and help your neighbors by reducing the chances of wheat streak mosaic, barley yellow dwarf, Hessian fly, or Russian wheat aphid."
