THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW 7-18-2017 DANE HICKS

Wheat: Where for art thou?

Low prices make 2017 crop nearly a no-show for county farmers favoring corn, beans

BY MELISSA HOBBS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – Anderson County farmers have wrapped up a wheat harvest for this season in an event that went nearly unnoticed – due to continuing poor prices for the golden grain.

Wheat used to be one of the biggest crops in Kansas with thousands of acres planted to wheat each year, but that's not the case anymore, said Frontier Extension Agent Darren Hibdon.

"We've seen a reduced acreage of wheat planted in recent years due to better corn and bean prices," Hibdon said. "The price of wheat is very low compared to the competitive soybean and corn prices."

Wheat harvest begins in early to mid June and typically wraps up by the end of July. According to Dan O'Brien, K-State Extension Market Specialist, the break even price for wheat – the commodity sale price that guarantees a farmer gets back his costs for seed, fuel and equipment depreciation for planting the crop – is around $4.50 per bushel.

The average bushel of wheat this year brought in between $3.54-$3.91.

Comparatively, soybeans bring in $9-$10.50 per bushel.

Statewide analysts forecast 289.8 million bushel of wheat to be harvested. Variable conditions across the state during the growing season – everything from hail to torrential rains – hammered some regions and dropped yields to some 10 bushel per acre. Others lucky enough to catch the moderate fringes of the season's extremes yielded 70 bushel and more.

In 2016 USDA statistics recorded for Anderson County showed about 11,800 acres out of 12,100 harvested for wheat with an average of about 47 bushel per acre. County farmers produced 555,000 bushel that year. Figures for 2017 were not immediately available, but the scarcity of planted wheat was apparent around Anderson County this year as acreage formerly planted to the waving stalks hosted other crops – corn in particular.

"Wheat harvest was almost an unnoticeable event," said Hibdon, "It was one of the smallest harvests in acreage that we've seen in years, but what we did have was good." He says the average

USD 365 pre-school program to cost $51,000+

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – The addition of a pre-school program in USD 365 will require funds of some $51,000 in salaries and possibly more in benefits when it's rolled out this fall.

School board members approved the expenditure in their end-of-year meeting June 30, hiring a full-time pre-school teacher and a teacher's aide at a combined salary of $51,225, and possible health insurance $7,676 apiece should the new hires choose to take part in the district's insurance plan. The board voted unanimously at its regular meeting earlier in June to establish the program, which is already in existence at Greeley Elementary, and expand it to Garnett and also at Westphalia as long as a minimum of 8 kids enroll.

Superintendent Don Blome said the positions would be funded by "At-Risk" and similar special program funds. Parents will also pay between $50-$80 per month for their child to attend the sessions. "At-Risk" funds come from the

No blue-green algae reports from local lakes

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

TOPEKA – A number of Kansas lakes and reservoirs have come under warnings for blue-green algae as summer temperatures ratcheted up in recent weeks, but Garnett lakes so far have tested clean of the dubious muck that plagued Crystal Lake two years ago.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment issued warnings last week for lakes in the counties of Marion, Barton, Osage, Rooks, Hamilton and Syracuse, as well as all zones of Milford Lake in the counties of Geary, Dickinson and Clay.

A press release from KDHE said lakes under a public health warning for blue-green algae may still be safe for activities like boating and fishing, but direct contact with the water like wading, skiing and swimming is strongly discouraged for people, pets and livestock.

Travel ball drains wallets, hopes to build players

Parents and players weigh costs, benefits of hectic summer play

BY MELISSA HOBBS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

COLONY – If you've sat on the sidelines of a local baseball or softball field this summer, it's likely that you've heard at least one conversation brought up discussing travel ball – and heard it described with moans or thrills.

Whether you like it or hate it, play it or prefer to stick closer to home, you probably at least know a kid or two that play on a traveling baseball or softball team. It's a summer lifestyle for these hot weather families of athletic gypsies, and area leagues are full of teams whose parents give up a good chunk of the summer to take party.

So what exactly is travel ball? To make it short, kids of various ages can try out for a team, pay a fee to be on the team once they are chosen, and then play in tournaments ranging from nearby metropolitan areas to as far as out of state. The tournaments are played on the weekends and last two to three days, and some teams play as frequently as every weekend starting from March going all the way to November.

The schedule for a travel ball player can be hectic and demanding, and the cost can be unbelievable. What exactly is the draw to travel ball teams over rec ball teams? According to Karlee Hammond who played travel softball, a lot of rec kids are just there for something to do, but she feels like travel ball kids really have a passion for the sport because they are making a big investment in time and money.

Hammond estimates that her parents probably spent around $1,500 each season for her to play ball, but that's a cost that she feels like was totally worth it. Angela Black, whose daughter Ridley played for a Buck Commander team before becoming ill this spring, agrees with Hammond.

"I feel it was 100 percent worth it. It builds character

Anderson County Fair

Justin Zook and Jess Rockers, Anderson County Fair Board, met with the commission. They inquired about purchasing the millings that are at the landfill from the Road & Bridge department to put on the west side of the arena. The Commissioners discussed how the fair is an extension of Anderson County and when they purchase the millings it is going towards another county funded entity not a private business. Justin said they would need approximately 150 tons to finish around the arena. Lester Welsh, road supervisor, agreed to haul the millings at $4/ton to the arena and the fair board will spread it out. The Commissioners approved for the fair board to purchase the millings and the road department to deliver.

U.S. Department of Education and are tied to the number of students in a building or district who qualify for the federal free school lunch program. At-Risk funds are aimed at establishing and maintaining programs for students who because of poverty are at risk of not eventually graduating high school.

The program is laid out for kids 3-4 years old with the focus on early childhood education as a part of the "Kansas Can" initiative's priority on preparing kids with the basic skills to start kindergarten. The Greeley program has been in operation for several years and has about 25-30 participants annually.

Such programs focus on things like establishing that students can separate from parents without being upset; can focus attention on tasks like sitting and listening to a teacher; acknowledging the adult is in charge; problem solving without physical aggression; motor skills sufficient to hold a pencil correctly, color and use scissors, and possible write his/her name, and others.

Garnett Elementary School Principal Krista Hedrick said at the June meeting the program, estimated with a class load of 40 in Garnett, would likely have a waiting list if it were currently in place. Parents of eight kids at Westphalia had shown interest in participating. "At-Risk" funds come from the U.S. Department of Education and are tied to

They used to hate Reagan, too

At the time – long before the severed head and the vagina hats and publicly disparaging a president's 11 year-old son because he fidgets – it was the most vile thing I'd ever heard.

It was the spring of 1982. I was walking back from class to my dorm at the University of Missouri and I passed a small group of students clustered near a set of steps on the sidewalk by McAlester Hall. The loudest mouth of the bunch was holding court, bemoaning President Reagan's proposed restrictions on guaranteed college loans to students whose families were above certain income guidelines. He was convinced the president had put him and his government pre-paid future directly in the crosshairs of fiscal policy.

"I hope the next one who tries, gets the SOB," he fumed.

Of course he was referencing the attempt on Reagan's life from about a year previous. I remember thinking – wow – a few thousand dollars in student loans is justification enough to this guy for the killing of a president?

Of course there was more – in the '80s we were playing the final hand of the Cold War back before the Russians folded, and half the campus at Mizzou – students and faculty, mind you – were convinced Reagan was going to goad the Soviets into a nuclear badminton match and end humankind. AIDS picked up steam in the 1980s and the Left blamed Reagan for not waving a magic federal wand to keep infected people from having unprotected sex. The bare mention of cutting social programs at the federal level unleashed a torrent of wailing that Reagan was a rich man's puppet who wanted a freshly feathered nest for the upper class while poor folks and minorities had to fight for a park bench to sleep on.

He opposed gun control; he questioned the value of racial quotas and affirmative action and opposed abortion; he fired striking air traffic controllers who walked off the job; he enacted tax policies favorable to businesses growth and job creation – and he was crucified nightly by the media and by college campus and labor union protests for being an elitist, heartless conservative.

I became accustomed to certain terminology. The media branded conservatives "ideologues," but Leftists were deemed "Progressives."

How ironic to have seen the culmination of that privileged mouthpiece's sidewalk rant 30 years later. Even Reagan wasn't able to stop Democrats and Republicans from fostering and exacerbating the nation's student loan crisis in the decades hence. All that easy money blasted college costs sky-high, turned colleges and universities into ubiquitous diploma mills and burdened the surplus of millennium graduates with debt that no tepid economy could ever absorb. Just like in health care and national defense, easy money policies for college drove prices out of reach – 500 percent inflation in real dollars since 1985.

Those days were the genesis of electronic punditry. It was the time in which the mainstream media would turn full tilt with its unbridled attacks on conservatives, expose its liberal bias and eventually give birth to Rush Limbaugh, Fox News and the opposing conservative media movement. Retired reporters even freely espoused their bias in Reagan's curtain call coverage after his 2004 death. Curmudgeon Helen Thomas revealed her contempt outright: "To my mind, a President should care about all people, and he didn't, which is why I will always feel Reagan lacked soul," she said after Reagan's death. And who can forget good 'ole Wolf Blitzer asking for a description of mourners at the Reagan Library: "Can you tell, Thelma, if the crowds really look like America? Are they ethnically diverse – African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans - or is it largely white?"

Which makes the irony even more apparent when candidates – even some Republicans – drop Reagan's name like it's some sort of political talisman or something. What's true is that for the constancy of the attack against him, his detractors never really changed anyone's opinion. He died perhaps the most popular president of recent times.

The parallels to President Trump are many, both in policy and in criticism.

Trump's followers are devoted. Even those who didn't support him in the primary accept him as the only thing standing between the country and another four years of big government malaise. Hatred from the Left in the '80s, although constant and searing, wasn't buoyed by round-the-clock cable news coverage and modern social media. Trump, devoid of Reagan's patience and public grace and with his legions of both devotees and haters, faces the same old nasty – poured into a new-millennium mold.

PHONE FORUM

Record your comments on the topic of your choice at (785) 448-2500, press option 1. You do not need to leave your name. Comments will be published anonymously. Calls may be edited for publication or omitted.

The Phone Forum has had some really insignificant topics lately. You can tell that when the word moron is used more than once in a call. Let me suggest the following topics for discussion instead. 1) What is the Democrat party going to do about their party cheating Bernie Sanders out of the nomination? 2) Is the world safer after releasing millions of dollars to Iran as part of the nuclear deal? 3) North Korea going to pollute less after being given millions in the Paris Accord? 4) Does anybody really think Bill Clinton and Loretta Lynch talked about grandkids when they met at the airport by accident? 5) Are race relations better after eight years of Barack Obama? 6) Why is Hillary Clinton deleting subpoenaed emails not a crime? 7) Why did the Clinton Foundation close up shop after the election when the opportunity to do good deeds is ongoing? And 8) the city of Garnett rejected having Wal-Mart and McDonalds here years ago, why complain about economic opportunities now?

Thank you.

Is there any reason the City of Garnett doesn't spray for Johnson Grass? The State of Kansas has declared it a noxious weed a long time ago and it grows like wildfire. The city's done nothing about it for years and I was wondering why?

Okay, so if you bring your kids to a tractor pull, don't you pretty much figure there's going to be a lot of loud noise? Don't know why someone would do this and then complain about the noise. Next time bring ear plugs, duh.

About Mr. Hicks' column in the paper this week. For someone who thinks he knows everything, he sure asks a lot of questions.

I sure hope local businesses and organizations in Anderson County will have booths in the Merchant's Tent at the Anderson County Fair. This is a great way to get face time with hundreds of people at the fair all in one evening. It's very cheap advertising and public relations and it is well worth your money.

To Mrs. Martin on your retirement from city manager. Thank you for all you did for our community and the BS you had to put up with from the public, commissioners and staff and the Phone Forum. Your work will be missed.

Blazing hot weather out there folks. Please be sure to keep fresh water out for your dogs and please try to make sure they have some shade. If you don't have a shade tree nearby move them to the west side of your house so they have shade in the afternoon. Thanks.

Trump triumphs in Warsaw with nationalist speech

Imagine that President Donald Trump gave a speech praising a strong Europe.

Imagine that he called forthrightly on Russia to stop its aggression in Ukraine and join the community of responsible nations.

Imagine that he embraced the mutual defense commitment, so-called Article 5, of NATO.

Imagine that he extolled the role of women in our society.

Imagine that he said we share the hope of every soul to live in freedom.

Imagine that he celebrated the free press and ceaseless innovation, and a spirit of inquiry and self-criticism.

That's the speech that Trump gave in Warsaw during his European trip for the G-20. It was easily the best of his presidency -- well-written and moving, soaked in Polish history and grounded in Western values. And yet it has been attacked for, as one liberal outlet put it, sounding "like an alt-right manifesto." The address also got a lot of praise, but the criticism was telling. Some of it was from commentators who simply can't abide Trump, but a lot of it reacted against core elements of the speech.

It was unabashedly nationalist. Not in a bumptious way, but one that acknowledged the importance of "free, sovereign and independent nations." Trump used Poland's story to augment the theme. He talked of a Polish nation that is "more than one thousand years old," that endured despite its borders being wiped out for a century, that withstood a communist assault on its freedom, its faith and its very identity.

NATIONAL COMMENTARY

It emphasized the importance of culture. Trump called Poland a "faithful nation." He talked of the sermon Pope John Paul II preached in Warsaw in 1979, when a crowd of a million chanted, "We want God." He said that large economies and fearsome weapons aren't enough for our survival; we need "strong families and strong values," and "bonds of history, culture and memory."

It argued that we must demonstrate civilizational self-confidence, the will to defend our values.

Finally, it unapologetically invoked "the West," which, Trump noted, writes symphonies, rewards brilliance, values freedom and human dignity, and has created a truly great community of nations.

All of this strikes the ears of Trump's progressive critics the wrong way. They believe that nations are best constrained by multinational or supranational institutions like the EU. They think that all the nonmaterial things that lend our lives meaning -- God, family, national loyalty -- are atavistic, overrated or best not spoken of too much. They find the idea that the West might be beset by a crisis of confidence ridiculous (having apparently missed the past 10 years of European misgovernment: economic misery caused by the common currency, destabilizing waves of refugees and indigenous terror attacks that have rocked France and Britain). Finally, amazingly enough, they find the West itself an offensive and exclusionary concept.

Trump warned in his speech of fighting for centuries to maintain our freedom, only to lose it to "a lack of pride and confidence in our values." The unhinged reaction to his address -- which once would have been considered clearly within the mainstream of American thought and rhetoric -- shows how this, alas, is not an idle worry.

—Rich Lowry is editor of the National Review.

The unfair cruelty of the minimum wage

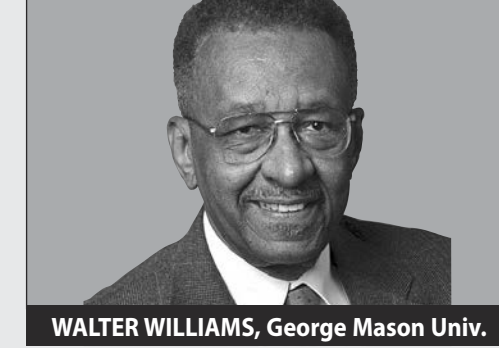

There are political movements to push the federal minimum hourly wage to $15. Raising the minimum wage has popular support among Americans. Their reasons include fighting poverty, preventing worker exploitation and providing a living wage. For the most part, the intentions behind the support for raising the minimum wage are decent. But when we evaluate public policy, the effect of the policy is far more important than intentions. So let's examine the effects of increases in minimum wages.

The average wage for a cashier is around $10 an hour, about $21,000 a year. That's no great shakes, but it's an honest job for full- or part-time workers and retirees wanting to earn some extra cash. In anticipation of a $15-an-hour wage becoming federal law, many firms are beginning the automation process.

Panera Bread, a counter-serve cafe chain, anticipates replacing most of its cashiers with kiosks. McDonald's is rolling out self-service kiosks that allow customers to order and pay for their food without ever having to interact with a human. Momentum Machines has developed a meat-flipping robot, which can turn out 360 hamburgers an hour. These and other measures are direct responses to rising labor costs and expectations of higher minimum wages.

Here's my question to supporters of higher minimum wages: How compassionate is it to create legislation that destroys an earning opportunity? Again, making $21,000 a year as a cashier is no great shakes, but it's better than going on welfare, needing unemployment compensation or idleness. Why would anybody work for $21,000 a year if he had a higher-paying alternative? Obviously, the $21,000-a-year job is his best known opportunity. How compassionate is it to call for a government policy that destroys a person's best opportunity? I say it's cruel.

GUEST COMMENTARY

San Francisco might give us some evidence for what a $15 minimum wage does. According to the East Bay Times, about 60 restaurants around the Bay Area closed between September and January. A recent study by Michael Luca of Harvard Business School and Dara Lee Luca of Mathematica Policy Research calculated that for every $1 hike in the minimum hourly wage, there is a 14 percent increase in the likelihood that a restaurant rated 3 1/2 stars on Yelp will go out of business. Fresno Bee reporter Jeremy Bagott says that even some of San Francisco's best restaurants fall prey to higher minimum wages. One saw its profit margins fall from 8.5 percent in 2012 to 1.5 percent by 2015 (http:// tinyurl.com/y6wy3gne). Most restaurants are thought to require profit margins between 3 and 5 percent to survive.

Some think that it's greed that motivates businessmen to seek substitutes for labor, such as kiosks, as wages rise. But don't blame businessmen; just look in the mirror. Suppose both McDonald's and Burger King are faced with higher labor costs as a result of higher minimum wages. McDonald's lowers its labor costs by installing kiosks and laying off workers, but Burger King decides to not automate but instead keep the same amount of labor. To cover its higher labor costs, Burger King must charge higher prices for its meals, whereas McDonald's gets by while charging lower prices. Which restaurant do you think people will patronize? I'm guessing McDonald's. What customers want is an important part of a company's decision-making.

But there are other actors to whom companies are beholden. They are the companies' investors, who are looking for returns on their investments. If one company responds appropriately to higher labor costs, it will produce a higher investor return than one that does not. That means "buy" signals for the stock of a company that responds properly and "sell" signals for the stock of one that does not, as well as possible outside takeover attempts for the latter.

The best way to help low-wage workers earn higher wages is to make them more productive, and that's not accomplished simply by saying they are more productive by mandating higher wages.

24th annual KATP - A memory that will last a lifetime

14 June 2017
 My last day at the 24th Annual KATP in Valley Falls, Ks.

I woke up this morning to the rumble of thunder and pouring rain. Everyone was directed to meet at 8:00 a.m. in the high school, as field work was delayed until 9:30 a.m. We were all assigned small tasks to do in the Lab until 9:15.

We reported to the field for the morning roll call and our days' work assignments.

An announcement was soon made that another strong thunderstorm was rapidly approaching in our direction. We were told by staff personnel to return to the high school until noon. Once again we were assigned to help out in the Lab.

The storms had cleared out and it was back to work in the field. The afternoon was spent putting finishing touches to all the units that were still being excavated. An almost perfect stone knife was found wedged in were said once again.

To bed at 10:30 p.m. as another thunderstorm has arrived with lots of wind driven rain.

15 June 2017

Up at 6:15 a.m. and I drove to Simple Simons for breakfast. Soon after I was heading home.

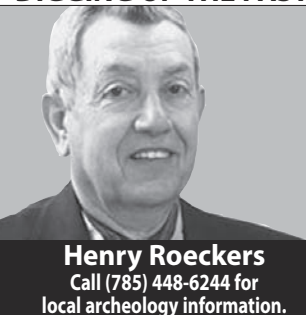

I made a quick stop in Lawrence to see a friend and at 10:30 a.m. I arrived home after driving 93.5 miles.

All I have now are my memories of another wonderful experience in my lifetime.

Thank each of you for allowing me to share just a few of those memories with you.

Rural fairs bring money, sense of community

BY JODI HECKEL ILLINOIS NEWS BUREAU

CHICAGO – The agricultural fairs that can be found in nearly every county in Illinois each summer bring money into the local and state economies and provide agricultural education and a sense of unity in communities and families, according to a study assessing their impact. Alex Norr, a former graduate student in the University of Illinois Department of Urban and Regional Planning, worked with U. of I. Extension on the study, "Economic Impact of Illinois Agricultural Fairs," completed earlier this year. Norr talked about the impact of fairs and their future with News Bureau arts and humanities editor Jodi Heckel.

How do county fairs contribute to their surrounding communities?

County fairs play a significant part in their local economies – especially in more rural areas – and the state economy. The main purpose of this study was to understand the economic impact that fair attendees traveling to, from and around the fair had on the host community and the state as a whole. We estimate that approximately $80 million was spent within the local communities in 2014 on things such as fuel, food, lodging, goods and services. It is important to point out that this does not include money spent inside the fairgrounds or on fair activities. That $80 million in ancillary sales translates to an economic impact of $90 million for the state. The value added is the result of money turning over as it moves along the supply chain of a given good or service. To break that down geographically, Illinois county fairs generate an estimated economic impact of $44 million in the northern part of the state, $17 million in the central part, and $12 million in the southern part. In addition, we estimate that the associated economic impact supports over 1,000 non-fair-related jobs.

We also estimated the total fair revenue to be approximately $90 million dollars. Although we didn't include these expenditures in our economic models, fair officials and local vendors estimate that about 20 percent of fair revenue is spent and cycled through the local communities.

In an effort to better understand the community and social benefits of county fairs, I conducted interviews with local fair board members, local fair sponsors and fair participants across the state.

I found that the local community benefits because the fair acts as a catalyst for continuing local traditions, increasing unity within the community and providing agriculture education.

What is the state's investment in fairs?

Crystal Lake in Garnett showed signs of the algae August 7, 2015, and was immediately closed. The algae dissipated and was deemed cleared by August 28 when the lake was re-opened. There's no treatment for the algae which eventually dissipates on its own. Cooler temperatures and rain are believed to help alleviate its growth.

State officials noted that drinking water facilities in parks with infected lakes are still safe to drink since drinking water doesn't come out of the lakes. Garnett's Crystal Lake is no longer used as an impoundment for the city's water supply and numerous rural water districts which purchase water from the city, since a pipeline was built several years ago to transport water from the Cedar Creek Pumping Station directly to the Crystal Lake treatment plant.

The algae, or cyanobacteria, is believed to be caused or worsened by chemical runoff from farmland and prolonged heat. Pet owners should be aware that animals that swim in or drink water affected by a harmful algae bloom or eat dried algae along the shore may become seriously ill or die.

1997 - High Wheat Yields Boosts Economy

10 years ago.... Members of Anderson County's Public Building Commission last week turned their thoughts from the location of the proposed county jail project to keeping its construction on budget after city leaders approved its location on the courthouse square. The Garnett City Commission voted 2-1 Tuesday night to approve a special use permit for the jail project on the county courtyard. Groundbreaking on the project is set for August 27.

20 years ago.... This year's wheat harvest is beginning to look like the big one. It may be so good, in fact, that county extension agent Jill Zimmerman, had trouble bridling her enthusiasm last week. Farmers are reporting yields of 70, 80, and even 90 bushels of wheat per acre. That's far above the county's average production level of around 35-40 bushels, and excellent news for farmers and the local economy.

Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact as a host for a waste storage site, a suggested area for such a site should Kansas be selected includes parts of Anderson County. The selected location lies 30 miles east of the Wolf Creek Power Plant and runs in a northeast-southwesterly direction. If built, the facility would cover some 200 acres and is expected to employ 20-40 workers.

5 Summer Safety Tips for Senior Care

- 1. Ensure they drink plenty of fluids throughout the day. Seniors are more susceptible to dehydration. Remind them to drink water often and make sure they have water bottles in their refrigerator.
- 2. Remind them to dress appropriately to stay cool and avoid sunburn. Encourage seniors to wear natural, light-colored fabrics to feel cooler and absorb less heat from the sun.
- 3. Spend time with someone in an air-conditioned environment. If you know a senior who does not have an air conditioner, consider purchasing them a fan or bringing them to a cool place to sit.
- 4. Offer to run errands, especially during peak hours. Seniors should only spend a very short amount of time outside between 10 a.m. - 6 p.m. Offer to pick up groceries or prescriptions, if possible.
- 5. Know the signs of dehydration, heat exhaustion and heat stroke. Get medical attention immediately if the heat is causing confusion, dizziness, fatigue, headaches or fainting.
