Responders make quick work of storm's aftermath

Only known injury comes when worker is bumped in traffic surge

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – The blunt-force storm that smashed into Garnett and the surrounding area Thursday downed power lines, dropped trees and limbs and damaged structures, but officials say a responder suffered the only injury when he was bumped by a passing vehicle on a Garnett street.

Garnett airport manager Gary Ecclefield said the facility's Automated Weather Observatory System (AWOS) recorded average wind speeds averaging 75 mph in the storm, with gusts up to 80-90 mph. One commuter aircraft belonging to Pence Areal Services, a company that performs aerial spraying in the area, was ripped from its tie-downs and destroyed in the storm. Ecclefield said the airport recorded 82/100s of rain for the day.

Anderson County Emergency Management Director J.D. Mersman said the bulk of the storm tracked from Harris to Garnett and then north of Kincaid.

"Garnett seemed to take the brunt of the damage," Mersman said. "Radar indicated the wind velocities really increased just east of Garnett and then decreased some as the storm moved southeast."

Mersman said several buildings were damaged in and around Harris, but the area fared far better than proper-

THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW 7-24-2018 / DANE HICKS

High winds hammered Garnett and areas of Anderson County on Wednesday, doing significant damage to several homes and properties as well as utility infrastructure. Crews were still removing storm debris on Monday. Power was restored to most areas of the city and KCPL service areas within a few hours of the storm's conclusion.

Branson tragedy prompts reminder to local boaters

Check weather first,
monitor phone apps
and the skies

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – The county's emergency management director said last week area fishermen and boaters should practice good "situational awareness" with weather reporting options and their own senses when enjoying area lakes, in hopes of avoiding a similar tragedy that killed 17 people on Table Rock Lake near Branson Wednesday.

Radar tracking showed the same storm system that produced up to 90 mph winds when a storm buffeted Garnett shortly after 4 p.m. Wednesday also hammered into the Branson area around 7 p.m., catching a commercial amphibious "Duck" boat on Table Rock Lake and sinking it. Seventeen of 31 people aboard lost their lives only about 100 feet from the shore.

Though no commercial vessels frequent lake waters at the various lakes in Eastern Kansas, the lakes are favorites for many private boat and watercraft owners and fishermen.

"Kansas storms tend to develop fast and move fast in the spring and summer," Mersman said. "Lightning is always a big concern in addition to damaging winds with the more severe storms. I would encourage anyone out on the lakes that hear thunder to find shelter. Even a vehicle is better than being exposed to the elements when lightning is in the area."

Mersman said Cedar Valley Reservoir west of Garnett presented particular threats with fast-rising water levels and flash flooding at its furthest south end.

"We have had to rescue people and recover vehicles that have been surrounded or submerged in the fast rising part of the reservoir," Mersman said. He said law enforcement officers try to check those areas regularly and let campers know about the threat of possible fast rising waters, but that those LEOs may often be called

Drought forces opening of CRP to haying, grazing

MANHATTAN– Stockmen holding some 6,300 acres in Conservation Reserve Program ground in Anderson County will be able to hay and graze applicable parts of that acreage, after a drought emergency declaration from the federal department of agriculture.

A press release from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farm Service Agency Kansas Executive Director David Schemm said earlier this month that 43 Kansas counties had been authorized for emergency haying and grazing use of Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) acres for the remainder of fiscal year 2018, which runs through September 30.

June closed with Anderson County nearly two inches below normal in precipitation for the month. For the year through June the county was down more than 6 inches in average rainfall – receiving 9.06 inches compared to an expected 15.57 – or some 40 percent less than average.

Local FSA county committees in these counties designated as D2 (severe drought) level on the U.S. Drought Monitor requested and were approved by the Kansas FSA State Committee for emergency hay/graze beginning July 16. The emergency grazing period for these counties will end September 30, 2018. The emergency haying authorizations ends 30 calendar days from the authorization date, not to exceed August 15, 2018. No haying or grazing can

USD 365 board hires security officer, awards raises, makes new hires

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – USD 365 School Board Members approved the hiring of a former sheriff's department resource officer for its newly created Safety and Security Director position at the board's recent meeting.

Phil LeVota of Garnett served as resource officer through the Anderson County Sheriff's Office while he was a deputy. Former sheriff Scot Brownrigg was awarded an $80,000 federal grant to establish a resource officer program for USD 365 and USD 479 in 2009. Those funds eventually expired, but LeVota was maintained in the roll for a period of time after sheriff Jeff Hupp took over the department in 2012. The program eventually dissolved. LeVota left the department in 2016.

Local school board members in USD 365 and superintendent Don Blome rekindled discussions about adding armed protection for district schools in April after a February shooting at a Florida high school. The school district opted to develop its own security department within its own management, and will determine its own training, procedures and protocols. LeVota will be salaried at $47,000 plus benefits. In other business at the occur prior to July 16, 2018. CRP practices eligible currently do NOT include CP25.

"Kansas FSA is dedicated to helping our producers when they face challenging situations like the drought Kansas is currently experiencing. By authorizing the release of these CRP acres, we can give producers access to desperately needed forage and grazing," said SED Schemm. "Eligible producers who are interested in emergency haying and grazing of CRP must request approval through their local FSA before haying and grazing eligible acreage and obtain a modified conservation plan from the NRCS that includes haying and grazing provisions. Current provisions allow grazing on up to 100 percent of a field based upon the forage management plan developed by NRCS and up to 75 percent stocking rate," Schemm added.

There will be no CRP annual rental payment reduction for 2018 emergency haying and grazing authorizations. To take advantage of the emergency grazing provisions, authorized producers can use the CRP acreage for their own livestock or may grant another livestock producer use of the CRP acreage. The eligible CRP acreage is limited to acres located within the approved county.

In counties that are authorized for emergency haying and grazing, producers are reminded that the same CRP acreage cannot be both hayed and/or grazed at the same time. For example, if 50 percent of a field or contiguous field is hayed, the remaining unhayed 50 percent cannot be grazed; it must remain unhayed and ungrazed for wildlife. In addition, participants are limited to one hay cutting and are not permitted to sell any of the hay.

For more information and to request approval for emergency haying or grazing use of CRP acres, producers should contact their local county FSA office. Contact information can be found online at <http://offices.usda.gov>.

ic plan, outlined the formation of Opportunity Zones as part of incentives designed to stimulate investment in rural areas and impoverished urban areas.

The area approved for the incentives in Anderson County includes the cities of Garnett and Greeley and roughly the northeast 25 percent of the county. A total of 74 such "tracts" were approved statewide.

The plan establishes tracts in needy areas where special tax incentives are available to investors who invest in local businesses or other investments. People who have realized a capital gain from the sale of a property or investment can invest those gains in a "Qualified Opportunity Fund" organized locally and targeted at local development projects within the zone, committing those funds for and avoiding federal taxes on the amount of that capital gain for five years. Investors who sign on for 10 years receive even more incentives.

Colyer said the plan had been rushed through the application phase in order to sign up applicable poverty-prone areas, and that full details on the program would be forthcoming from the Kansas Department of Commerce after they're received from Washington.

The Governor said Kansas' economic climate right now was one of different needs in different places. "Our unemployment rate right now is under 3.4 percent," Colyer said. "We actually have more jobs available than there are people looking for them - like 3,000-4,000 more."

"What that means is we have to move the whole skill set up, and it means capital investment." Garnett City Manager Chris Weiner told Colyer he believed the local area had great potential and had a number of training programs established, but that too often the area exported its trained workers.

"We have Neosho County (welding and HVAC training facility) pumping out welders," Weiner said, but he noted the closing of Garnett's former Taylor Forge's HUMCO heavy steel fabricating plant, where many of those welding graduates could be put together locally.

"For us that site location is huge," Weiner said. "We need that facility filled."

Weiner noted housing was another current need in the local area. Local real estate agent Beth Mersman said the present inventory of houses for sale in the local area was around 30 homes - the lowest she could remember.

"In the past we've had 70-80 on the market at any one time. The last few years we've had 40-50," Mersman said. "I've been doing this 20 years and this is the lowest I've seen."

Mike Burns, president of AuBurn Pharmacies in Garnett, said the area had a particular problem with low unemployment and reduced housing options.

"We talk about wanting to recruit a company with a hundred jobs, but we don't have the people to fill them," Burns said. "Then we get into the idea of trying to get people to commute here to work because there's no place for them to live. We need those bodies."

Housing start statistics for Garnett have been dismal for a number of years, with only a handful of building permits issued within the city limits since the early 2000s. However, Anderson County zoning records show some 200 permits issued for acreages in the rural areas of the county since the county adopted zoning and a permit system in 1999.

Colyer said further details on the Opportunity Zone program should be available in the third or fourth quarter of this year.

GOWING

AUGUST 10, 1932 - JULY 19, 2018

Tommy Lee Gowing of Parker, Kansas left this heavenly earth on Thursday, July 19, 2018 in Adrian, Missouri. He was born on August 10, 1932 in Kansas City, Missouri to William McKinley and Blessing Iris (Casto) Gowing.

Gowing

Tommy attended grade school in La Cygne, Kansas and graduated from La Cygne High School in 1950. To further his education Tommy attended Kansas State University from 1950 to 1952 majoring in agriculture and playing football for the Wildcats. He was drafted into the United States Army during the Korean War in 1952 and served as a tank mechanic. During this time, Tommy played football for the Army in the Pioneer League at Fort Richardson in Anchorage, Alaska until 1954. Tommy went back to Kansas State after serving his country and continued his education and playing football until 1955.

On June 10, 1956, Tommy Lee Gowing and Patricia Marie (White) Gowing were united in marriage at the First Christian Church in La Cygne, Kansas. To this union three sons were born: Darrell Lee, Gerald Dean and Gregory Eugene. The family lived on a farm south of Fontana, Kansas where he raised Polled Herford cattle and row crops in the Maries Des Cygnes river bottoms.

Family life kept Tommy busy as he was actively involved in the boys' 4-H club and FFA projects along with the numerous sporting events they participated in throughout the years. As Tommy grew older he enjoyed planting and working in his garden, attending local and state fairs, and helping his son Darrell with his construction business. Religion was a strong aspect of his life and he enjoyed visiting with his church friends and listening to the gospel at Sunday services where he was a member of the First Christian Church of Garnett, Kansas.

Tommy was preceded in death by his parents William and Blessing Gowing and his beloved wife Patricia Marie. He is survived by three sons: Darrell and Gerald of Lane, Kansas; Greg and wife Debra of Goddard, Kansas; two grandchildren McKinley Stewart and McCallister Joscelyn Gowing also of Goddard, with a host of other relatives and friends.

Amendment is starting point to fix education in Kansas

After more than a decade in which the people of Kansas have been forced to yield their right to fund education in their state to the Kansas Supreme Court, it is now utterly clear a constitutional amendment will be required to ever set the situation right and back in keeping with constitutional intent.

And after millions of dollars in legal fees in lawsuits against the state over education funding, Kansans responding to a recent poll are finally saying 'enough.'

A Cor Strategies poll showed 60 percent of Kansas voters surveyed would be willing to amend the state constitution to change a word – literally one word – upon which the overzealous court has based its authority in countermanding constitutional intent. That word and its associated text: "The Legislature shall make suitable provision for finances of the education interests of the state" would seem simple enough to fix, but the history of the issue has been anything but simple.

In responding to a lawsuit from a handful of school districts, the KSC in 2005 decided it would determine what "suitable" meant – to the tune of an extra $853 million. This was after a $646 million increase between 2004-2005. Funding dropped during the recession after all arms of state government underwent cuts, but even recession funding levels for schools in 2010 were comparatively higher than several previous years.

In reality two issues drive education in Kansas. One is in who rightfully should decide how education is proscribed and funded, and the other is the consideration that even when funding is increased, college-bound kids' ACT scores don't go up.

Since 2005, spending per pupil (all dollars divided by all students) in Kansas increased 35 percent, from some $9,600 to a little over $13,000, but over the same term ACT scores for Kansas kids have nestled continually around a score of 22.

So if the moving target of a "suitable" funding level costs millions in legal fees to try to hit, additional hundred of millions from taxpayers' pockets, and has no determined impact on student performance – what exactly is the point?

After more than a decade and all that money spent every which direction, this is precisely the point that is dawning on Kansans in that poll, although the general consensus among many Kansans is that money still equates to performance.

That's even after the famous Missouri education debacle of the 1980s, when the infamous federal judge Russell Clark took control of the Kansas City, Mo., school district in 1985 and made every day Christmas for the district's school administrators and teachers. Clark ruled the mostly black district was segregated in violation of the U.S. Constitution and its facilities impoverished, so he forced Missouri taxpayers to pay nearly $2 billion over the next 12 years, paying for some of the most grandiose school facilities in the nation – all to find out at the end student performance never improved.

Similarly, a constitutional amendment won't fix the ills in Kansas student performance. There is much more to be done regardless of money; different approaches to be taken, different experts with which to confer to form a better plan.

But putting the funding determination of Kansas' schools back into the hands of Kansas voters and their legislative representatives – as the state constitution intended – is the place to start.

Hurry up on veterans' memorial

Dear editor,
My husband, who grew up in Anderson county in both Greeley and Garnett and is a Greeley High Alumni, attends (from out of state) the latter reunion every year. Every year for the past three years we have inquired about the status of the Anderson County Armed Services Memorial. Every year we hear the same old story – they are still "in process" of verifying names and even the spelling of those names!
The sheer incompetence of this committee astounds me. There are still over 800 names to be verified and it's been three years already. At this rate Leon Lickteig, who offered to build the memorial, will be retired and possibly unable to build anything. The marble from Italy has been paid for and is sitting somewhere in the south of the country, ready for inscription. Hopefully the company will remain in business, someone will remember where it is and what it is for, and that it has been paid for!

Letter to the editor

In 2017 I wrote each of the county commissioners expressing my outrage that this project has not been completed, with a very sensible suggestion that was applied to a similar monument in my hometown back East: Build the monument, install a "generic" plaque that says "In Honor and Memory of all from Anderson County who served their country in the armed forces of the United States." the memorial bricks, already paid for at a cost of $100 each, inscribed with the veterans name and service, can be installed either in a walkway or even a wall surrounding the monument and can be installed as the names are verified – but somehow this process needs to be sped up and this project completed.

I cannot believe that the entire committee is simply sitting on this while someone thinks it's necessary to check eight hundred more names – this could take many more years. Several of these veterans have died since the idea was raised and my own husband's brother Kenneth Garner, class of 1947 and a veteran of both Korea and Viet Nam, can no longer make the trip to the reunion and will never see the wall meant to honor his sacrifice. (And sacrifice he did, as he still carries shrapnel in his body).

Would someone who can make haste with this project get it together and get this monument built ASAP – it's been over three years and I feel people have waited long enough. I no longer wish to receive letters from the commission telling me that these things take time. I personally see no necessity in checking 800 names to inscribe on a monument that at this rate will never be built so forget the name inscription idea and save that for a later date with the bricks. I feel your time is up – get moving!

Access to broadband focus of Kansas task force

For you folks who grind your teeth when that little circular arrow is spinning on your computer, or who see the screen on your computer go blank during that Netflix movie, well, help eventually may be on the way.

That help? The Statewide Broadband Expansion Planning Task Force, which is the Legislature's start on making sure that from border to border there is fast, reliable and affordable broadband Internet access.

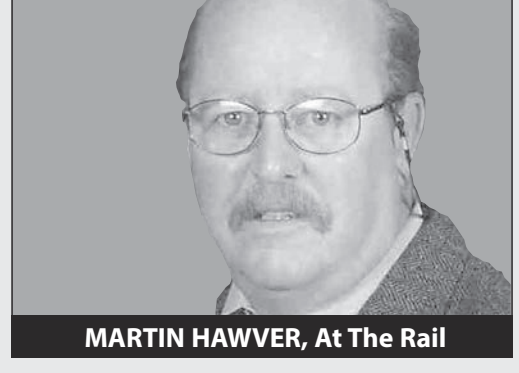

And for you folks who by now try to remember where you put your walker before heading out to pick up the newspaper on the driveway, this is a whole new level of "universal access." The old version? That was when the state's effort was to make sure that everyone in Kansas had access to a black dial telephone back when phone poles were sparse in areas where cattle outnumbered Kansans and where there were more combines than lawn mowers.

The effort: To first map out the areas of the state where access to fast Internet service is important to Kansans, to businesses and industries and to governments and organizations. That's going to be tricky, because nobody doesn't want the fastest Internet available, whether it's for watching movies, sending e-mails, the kids doing school work at home or competing for contracts for intellectual services.

It's different than the old days when a paved road was a major boost for economic development, isn't it?

The issue has turned out to be not just a rural issue where cell towers and cable services are sparse and a hill or a grain elevator can hamper that fast Internet service. There are blocks in major Kansas cities where the skies are obstructed by cable wires and a forest of antennae atop buildings, there are down times when that service isn't available or your computer or phone can't get on line.

STATE COMMENTARY

Figuring out where that Internet over wire or through the airwaves is substandard or not dependable is going to be tough. For rural areas, it's going to require cooperation among providers and some cost sharing between state and federal governments and the providers of Internet access to get that signal everywhere – at a profit.

Because, now that we've all got phones, broadband Internet access is joining water, electricity and mail as basic services that Kansans are demanding.

At some point, it's probably a good thing that the Legislature has decided to jump into the complicated issue of getting that broadband to everywhere in the state, and to some point, it's going to be interesting to see where the priorities are on that service.

Spend money, or maybe impose a tax on Internet service so that the high-demand areas help finance the rural areas? That's what happened with telephone service, as your phone bill tells you.

Does that access become a right, like access to public schools, which by the way want more broadband access so that students can study from home and the schools can provide study materials from around the world, not just the occasional e-mail or those textbooks which once printed aren't updated?

It's going to be interesting to watch and important for the state...

But...those little circular arrows are spinning on the task force, because its members haven't all been designated by legislative leaders, and there's not a list yet of the non-legislative members who are supposed to figure this broadband business out for us.

Yes, there is this election coming up, and in some rural areas of the state there are candidates talking about bringing high-speed broadband to every acre of Kansas.

But for now, that little arrow is still spinning...

Yes, the Supreme Court is undemocratic

In an era of partisan polarization, it is rare to get agreement on anything, but about this there should be a consensus: The Supreme Court is an undemocratic institution whose power should be carefully circumscribed.

The right has long been of this view, and the left is suddenly and opportunistically part-way there.

In an essay capturing progressives' new-found skepticism, Ezra Klein of Vox wrote that the Supreme Court "has always been undemocratic" and is now becoming even "more dangerous." This represents a welcome turnabout from cheering the high court's de facto legislating, although the left is about a half-century late to the insight that the court isn't a democratically elected legislature.

In the 1960s, the court became markedly more assertive, delivering a raft of activist decisions, especially on matters of criminal justice and sexual morality.

Progressives cheered all the while. They happily pocketed all the court-mandated policy changes to their liking, relieved of the burden of enacting them through democratic means.

Needless to say, the court was never meant to be an unelected lawmaking body, and it has taken on such a highly charged role in our politics, in part, because it arrogated this power to itself.

The court's legitimacy comes from faithfully interpreting laws passed by the legislature

NATIONAL COMMENTARY

RICH LOWRY, King Features Syndicate

and adhering to the Constitution that is the foundational governing document of the country, adopted and amended by "We the People." Anything else is a usurpation.

Progressives are, perversely, taking a hostile view of the court precisely when it may get a reliable majority of justices devoted to this vision.

Klein alleges that the court is becoming affirmatively "anti-democratic," meaning it isn't striking down democratically adopted voter rules and gerrymandered districts. Klein may oppose the Ohio law that purges nonvoters from the rolls, but there is a remedy readily at hand – changing the law in Ohio.

If the left were serious about its new worries about an undemocratic court, it would welcome the prospect of overturning Roe v. Wade.

Indeed, the belief that voters in states will ban abortion or more stringently regulate it if Roe is overturned is the single biggest motivating factor in opposition to Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh. In other words, on this issue, the worry is that the court will allow too much democracy.

Of course, the court should act as a check on the popular will at times. But in doing so, it must limit itself to enforcing the law and the Constitution. This is the goal of originalism, which should be embraced by both sides as the appropriately modest view of the court's role in our republic.

But this would represent an enormous loss for progressives.

First, a court that no longer envisions itself as an instrument of social change wouldn't hand the left totalist victories unachievable in the political realm. Two, the animating vision behind the Constitution – written by men with a strong suspicion of centralized power – runs counter to the logic of progressive government.

So the left will bang on about the undemocratic court without changing its core belief that it is rightfully the vehicle for imposing its policies.

Whoever is thirsty let him come

In John 4:7 we read when a Samaritan woman came to draw water, Jesus said to her, "Will you give me a drink?" In order to best understand this conversation an understanding of the Samaritan people is necessary. After the northern kingdom with its capital in Samaria fell to the Assyrians many Jews were deported to Assyria. Those left behind then intermarried with foreigners who were brought in to settle the land and keep the peace. The pure Jews hated this group of people and would not travel through the land. This woman was not only a Samaritan but she was known to be living in sin and was in a public place. No respectable Jewish man would talk to a woman under such circumstances. But Jesus did.

Jesus sat down by the well because he was tired from his journey. It was about the sixth hour or noon. The woman came to the well at noon because she did not want to meet any of the other women of the town who knew of her reputation. In John 4:7-42, we read how Jesus gave this woman an extraordinary message about fresh and pure water that would quench her spiritual thirst forever.

Jesus asks the woman for a drink. Her response reflects the prejudice that existed between the Jews and the Samaritans.

BY DAVID BILDERBACK

"You are a Jew and I am a Samaritan woman. How can you ask me for a drink?" (John 4:9) Jesus answered her, "Everyone who drinks this water will be thirsty again, but whoever drinks the water I give him will never thirst." (John 4:13) Jesus is talking to her about spiritual water for her soul. But the woman confuses the two kinds of water and says, "Sir, give me this water so that I won't get thirsty and have to keep coming here to draw water," (John 4:15)

The woman was interested in Jesus' message because she thought it could make her life easier. Jesus wanted the woman to understand her need for spiritual water. We would not think of depriving our bodies of food and water when they hunger or thirst. Why then should we deprive our souls. It is interesting to see how Jesus got this woman to understand. He had to show her the reason she couldn't get the spiritual ties in Garnett, where heavier damage was apparent and areas of town as well as KCPL services were without power for several hours.

He lauded Garnett work crews and administration for their quick response to the electrical damage and to clearing downed trees and limbs to open thoroughfares for emergency traffic. Anderson County and Allen County road departments assisted Garnett city crews with debris removal on Friday. Iola and Ottawa electric crews were called in just after the storm and worked with Garnett crews to re-establish power to most of the city overnight. Anderson County road crews also cleared trees and debris from a number of locations on county roads.

Staff from the Review observed heavy traffic in various parts of the city in the minutes after the storm passed. Mersman said dealing with increased city traffic was an extra concern for workers trying to clear streets and rectify damaged utility poles and electric lines.

"A firefighter was slightly struck by a moving vehicle while operating in the damaged part of Garnett," Mersman said. "It is extremely important that sight-seers stay out of the area after a storm like this hits. They put their safety, as well as the safety of various responders in jeopardy."

Sort of the same, but completely different

You want to stick out, but in a good way. And you want to convey that difference to your customers as part of your sales strategy to help you sell stuff.

Think back for a second... "Seven herbs and spices;" "Crisp and clean and no caffeine;" "Takes a licking and keeps on ticking." Kentucky Fried Chicken, 7-Up and Timex watches all found a way to illustrate what made them different from their competitors, and then ran with it in their advertising to a point that those slogans became part of our culture. When the whole idea of "fried" food took a 180 degree turn into a negative in our culture, Kentucky Fried Chicken even rebranded itself into "KFC."

So you need to consider two things: 1) what is it that sets your business apart in your customers eyes, or what is it that you want to set you apart in your customers' eyes, and; 2) How are you getting that point across to your customers?

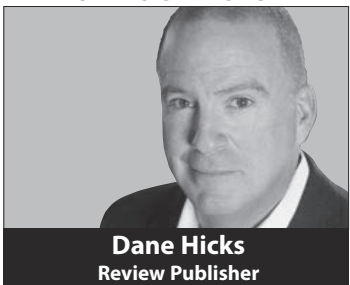

The more commodity-based your product or service is, the more important your "differentiator". And keep this in mind - it's not always up to you to determine what your differentiator is - this one you need to know from your customer's point of view. Ask them. Do a survey or conduct an informal focus group of some of your customers over lunch. It'll be fun and very educational.

Are you always the cheapest? Are you always the fastest? Do you have magical knowledge that's a value-added plus for your customers? Are you always on time? Are you the biggest? Are you small enough to offer super-personal service? Are you open later, earlier, on the weekends?

For instance let's say you have a lawn & landscaping service. What makes you different than the kid dragging his dad's lawn mower down the street to mow neighborhood lawns? Are you cheaper than he is? Probably not. Are you more dependable? Probably. Do you have knowledge he doesn't have about when and what to seed lawns? Probably. Do you offer other services like gutter cleaning? Do you schedule your customers for service regularly so they don't have to remember to call you? When considering your "differentiators," which is the most important to your customers? More importantly... how does that difference benefit your customers?

Your answer should become the theme of your sales efforts. Make it simple, easy to understand, and repeat, repeat, repeat!

"Takes a licking and keeps on ticking" told customers in a short, snappy phrase that Timex watches were tough and reliable. The difference that sets your business apart should come across the same way.

Build it into your "elevator speech"- that minute-long shepel you've memorized about your business; use it on your website, on your business cards, in your social media, in your radio, newspaper or television advertising; on your signage, your bumper stickers, your billboards, the poster the county fair association is doing for you because you're going to be a demo-derby sponsor this summer.

Be different, know why your customers love you for it, and drive it home.

County fairs are still important

BY RYLEE DERRER THE ODYSSEY ONLINE

Like many people, I used to have the same thoughts, "Oh it's just a county fair."

However, this year was the first time in eleven years I stepped foot onto the Rock Island County Fairgrounds without any animals or other 4-H projects to exhibit.

Instead, I spent the week watching from an entirely new perspective that gave me a whole new appreciation for what I used to consider "just a county fair".

More and more, society has begun to question the relevance and value of a county fair when less than 2 percent of the population is actively involved in production agriculture.

This question alone proves to me that county fairs are more important than ever.

Fairs and livestock exhibitions are the foundation for agriculture promotion in our society and, as our population continues to shift to a more urban demographic, it is the responsibility of a county fair to remind the public of the key role that agriculture, and rural communities, will continue to play in our economy and daily lives.

Fairs not only promote agriculture, but also supply jobs; support rural economic development and local commerce; and provide opportunities for youth and adult education.

The success of a fair is dependent on its volunteers and youth through programs like 4-H, whether they're exhibiting livestock, crops and clothing or newer projects like film making. Speaking from my own personal experience, I am so thankful for the opportunity to show livestock at the fair.

My experiences aided in providing me with hands-on learning about the realities of food production as well as gaining major life skills such as communication and responsibility that molded me into a well functioning member of society.

Many years ago, a simple gathering for commodity trade began as a way to bring friends and neighbors together to showcase hard work and effort. These things still matter. Fairs are the connecting point of the people and products that showcase our heritage. I wholeheartedly believe in fairs and what they can do for a community and even the participants.

I encourage everyone to take time this summer to visit your local county or state fair.

Take a stroll through the barns, strike up a conversation with a young exhibitor about his, or her, project.

Watch the 4-H auction, maybe bid on an animal, and see how the hard work put in by the owner truly pays off.

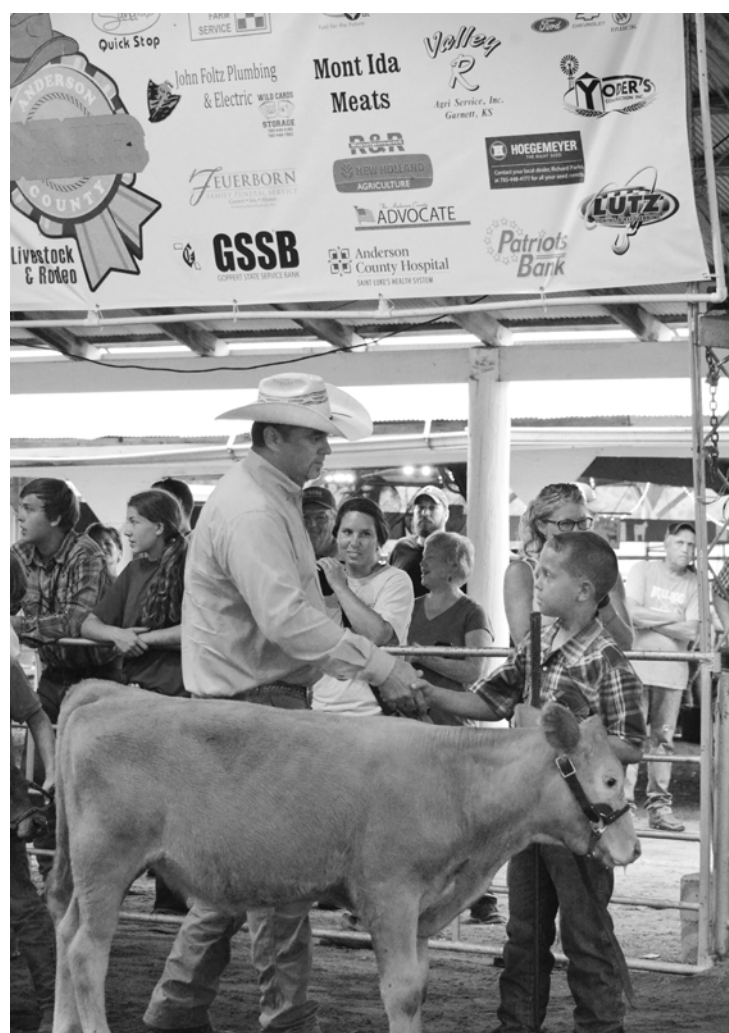

Experience a demolition derby, a concert, or play some carnival games with your family.

Whether you are lifetime attendee or have never set foot on a fairgrounds, now is the best time to get involved in one of our country's oldest traditions- you will not regret it.

Wheat is better than expected

While the 2018 wheat harvest remains fresh in the minds of Kansans, it's worth remembering civilization has been directly linked to the cultivation of grain. When primitive man first learned he could grow wheat during the summer, store it for winter food and use the leftover wheat to plant in the spring, he realized he could settle in one place.

Villages and towns followed as man no longer needed to follow game and forage for food. Anthropologists speculate that primitive man probably first chewed the raw wheat kernel before he learned to pound it into flour and mix it with water to make porridge.

Approximately 10,000 years B.C., man first started eating a crude form of flat bread baked with flour and water. Since that early beginning, wheat has become known as the staff of life. It has remained a staple in our diets in this country and around the world.

During this year when the Kansas wheat crop will be one of the smallest on record, it seems only fitting to take a closer look at this healthy food source.

For many, our day begins with a slice or two of bread made from wheat. Some people continue to eat wheat in snacks or some other form, throughout the day. Still, most Americans rarely eat more than four or five servings of bread, cereal, rice and pasta foods each day. The daily recommended intake is six to 11 servings according to U.S. dietary guidelines.

INSIGHT

JOHN SCHLAGECK, Kansas Farm Bureau

Today's well-informed consumer continues to understand the importance of increasing the consumption of whole grains. The convenience and nutrition of wheat makes it a natural for our fast-paced society. Wheat snacks come in an endless variety bound to please nearly every pallet.

Wheat consists mainly of complex carbohydrates that provide a source of time-released energy. The nutrition community recommends 45-65 percent of our daily calories come from carbohydrates.

Nutritionists also advise eating no more than 20-35 percent of our calories from fats and approximately 10-35 percent of our calories from protein.

Wheat foods provide fiber in our diets. Fiber is the carbohydrate in food that humans cannot digest. Fiber acts as a broom and sweeps out the digestive tract.

Eating fiber regularly helps with fewer incidences of colon cancer and some types of heart diseases. Sufficient amounts of fiber in our diet have been related to better control of diabetes and an overall healthy colon, according to nutritionists.

Research also suggests eating wheat bran may help prevent breast cancer.

Wheat foods are good sources of fiber as are fruits and vegetables. The American Dietetic Association recommends eating 20-35 grams of fiber daily. Americans usually consume only about 12 grams.

Kansans use hard red winter wheat in yeast breads and hard rolls. This state also produces the best flours in the world.

Look for ways to serve wheat products with every meal. This may not only improve your health and that of your family, but the economy of Kansas - the Wheat State.

Garnett Water Treatment Plant to change disinfection process temporarily

Starting July 30th, the Garnett Water Treatment Plant will be changing its W disinfection process from chloramines (chlorine and ammonia) to free chlorine (no ammonia added) for a few weeks in order to better disinfect dead end lines and lines that see very little water usage.

Once this is done we will switch back to chloramines.

You may or may not notice a slight change in taste and odor.

Flushing of lines and overflowing of the water towers will also be done at this time.

This is a common practice done in most communities in order to maintain safe disinfection levels.

Thank you for your patience and consideration while we go through this process to insure the safety of your drinking water.

This message is provided by the City of Garnett Water Treatment Department who supplies and treats water for the city of Garnett and surrounding rural areas, including the City of Greeley and Anderson County Rural Water Districts. Website: www.simplygarnett.com 10 years ago...

The Kansas Court of Appeals last month upheld a May 2006 conviction against a Garnett man sentenced to 27 years in prison for criminal sodomy and aggravated indecent liberties with a child. John Rutherford was sentenced to 324 months with the Department of Corrections as well as 60 months of post release probation for multiple counts and subsequently filed a request with the appeals court to review the sentencing.

Anderson County residents are recovering from the Sunday night lightning and rain storms which damages phone lines, dropped tree limbs, and did water damage to local roads and properties when as much as five inches of rain dropped on parts of the county overnight. The deluge and high winds were responsible for most of the damage reports in the area. Pea and marble sized hail was reported in Garnett and northern Anderson County.

for the county road to the landfill. The commissioners discussed at their regular Monday meeting the letter which had been received from the state concerning the landfill road. The commission would like to change the classification of the road so that it could be paved as there is federal aid money available to help with the blacktopping. However, before the project will be approved, the state must be satisfied that the project is needed.

A plan to provide services in Anderson County was presented by the Douglas County Citizens Committee on Alcoholism to county commissioners. The committee offers counseling, referrals, evalua-

The Garnett Church Furniture Company, since it organized and took charge of the old DeWolf factory, has manufactured church furniture only, but there was such a demand for bank furniture and fixtures that Harry Barnard, the manager, decided to again take up that line of work and new men have been added to the force in order to supply the land. Garnett was, long ago, placed on the map by her furniture factories, their output being equal to, if not superior to, the work turned out by factories in other parts of the country. She has reason to be proud.

2018 KATP winding down

10 June 2018

This was a very hot and windy day as it hit 99 degrees with a heat index of 104.

We took several extra breaks today and drank gallons of water. Today was an exciting day, during unit excavations the walls of the old Blacksmith shop were exposed in two units. The only artifacts found, however were an old butter knife and a few blacksmith related tools and iron hooks. Just at closing time Gayla Corley and three of her grandchildren (Maya, Levi and Hershyl), our very first guests from Anderson County, stopped by for a short visit.

11 June 2018

The forecast calls for possible thunder storms by evening. First thing this morning I was informed by Bob Hoard, our State Archaeologist, that I had phone calls from home to come in to our headquarters office over the weekend.

I soon placed a call home and learned that Kay had fallen and broke two of her ribs. I also found out two of her sisters were caring for her and there wasn't any need in me coming home, because there was nothing I could do at this time.

DIGGING UP THE PAST

Henry Roackers
Call (785) 504-4722 for local archeology information.

Very few artifacts were found today, but more of the old Blacksmith Shop walls were exposed.

This evening while I was at supper I met a couple from Council Grove (the gentleman said he and his brother were born in Garnett and that his father worked at one of the Depots in Garnett for several years. Their last name was ADAM (no "S"). Do any of you remember this family?

At 11:00 pm strong thunderstorms arrived, lots of rain and wind, but no hail or tornados in our area.

12 June 2018

It was a cool, brisk 60 degrees. Every bird in the neighborhood is happy this morning after the rain and cooler temperatures. I can even hear the wild turkeys down by the creek.

Finds today included: 1850's Brass U.S. Padlock, 3-time table fork, wagon parts, 3-large brass shoe or boot eyelets, porcelain button and some well preserved chicken egg shell. This afternoon we had a wonderful watermelon break.

This evening I helped Nancy Arendt and Britt Colle catalog artifacts we had found earlier at the Custer Camp site near Hays, Ks.

13 June 2018

It showered during the night and it's cool this morning. A few moments ago a lone coyote ran right behind my truck in our parking lot. Today we had lots of cookies, rolls and muffins given to us to eat on our breaks. The finds today were: a beautiful colored glass button, a small 4" inch tall bottle, iron rod, metal plate, clay marble, iron pedal and a lot more of the Blacksmith Shop walls.

This evening I attended a talk called 'A Probable Pawnee Hunting Camp on the Smoky Hill River' by Archaeologist Chris Hord. It was really interesting.

To be Cont'd...

"There are numerous phone apps and radars available on the market to receive alerts and see what's coming in," he said.

Area residents can sign up for CodeRed emergency weather and other alerts by going to the county emergency management department's web page at <http://andersoncountyks.org/emergency-management.html>.
