County tax sale set for October 10

Process aimed at putting tax-delinquent properties back on paying rolls laborius

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – County officials have set October 10 as the date for Anderson County’s foreclosure sale of tax delinquent properties, but the number of those properties has been trimmed by 22 from an original legal publication published in early July.

The sale will be held at 1:30 p.m. at the Anderson County Extension Office.

Fifty-two properties appeared on the initial publication of those headed to foreclosure sale July 9. Thirty remain in a follow-up publication that starts in today’s Review.

The original 52 properties owed some $194,000 in delinquent taxes. County counselor James Campbell, who prepared the properties for the upcoming sale, estimated at the time of the initial publication about 10 percent of the affected owners typically pay when they receive final notifications, and about another 10 percent pay up when the publication hits the newspaper.

Harold Deforest with the Anderson County Treasurer’s office interpreted those estimates into hard numbers.

“These 22 parcels returned $32,809.47 in taxes and $12,560.50 in interest & fees for a grand total of $45,369.97 collected,” Deforest said. “I sent out 97 courtesy letters back in February of 2018 which were intended as a heads up that another tax sale was pending.”

The remainder go to the sale date, but some parcels will remain unsold because they’re small parcels or basically not very useable or marketable, Campbell said.

Review to publish veteran’s memorial list

GARNETT – The names of some 5,000 Anderson County military veterans will be published in upcoming weeks in The Anderson County Review in an attempt to confirm their accuracy of spelling and other details, as the county’s Veterans Memorial Committee readies to begin construction of the memorial on the courthouse lawn this spring.

The committee was set to meet last night to make final preparations for the publication and finalize other details, according to committee member and Anderson County Clerk Julie Wettstein. Wettstein said materials for the project’s construction had been ordered, including electronic kiosks which will house digital photos, videos and biographical information on thousands of veterans who served in the country’s military branches. Also enroute is a black marble base that includes emblems from each military service.

Publication of the present list of names is designed to help with spelling revisions and to promote the project to other veterans or their families who may not yet have submitted information to be

Bud Fraker passes at 94

Longtime historian and businessman was part of 160-year local heritage

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – Anderson County lost a walking library of local history Sunday with the passing of Ralph Garris “Bud” Fraker.

Fraker passed away Sunday at age 94. Funeral services will be held Sept. 4 in Garnett.

His history with the local area traced back four generations; his grandfather came to Anderson County with his family at age six in 1857 and three years later shook hands with John Brown as Brown left the county with a group of slaves headed to Canada along the Underground Railroad. For more than 160 years there was a Fraker in Garnett to witness, catalogue and recount the area’s history.

“He could tell you who was related to who and who was married to who,” said Richard Singer. “And not just in the present – usually back several generations.”

Fraker’s father worked in a Garnett men’s clothing store in the early 1900s and eventually purchased it. Bud took the store over when his father passed away, and Fraker Clothing operated until Bud closed it and retired in 1990.

Bud joined the U.S. Navy in 1943 right after his high school graduation. He was one of the founding members of the Garnett Veterans of Foreign Wars post in Garnett, and oversaw several moves of the post in downtown Garnett and eventually the construc-

Storms may foretell snowy winter

Kansas weather official says there’s no guarantee lagging
precip won’t stay until winter

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

WESTPHALIA – The hammering of early morning storms which have buffeted the region almost daily for nearly two weeks are part of another stalled weather pattern delivering copious amounts of moisture to eastern Kansas.

It’s a pattern. Worse yet, according to state weather officials, there’s not any reason at this point to believe the pattern will dissipate prior to the arrival of cold weather – which means all this water could turn into snow and ice.

... unstable atmosphere...allows for repeated storm development over the same area.”

atmosphere, which allows for repeated storm development over the same area.”

A strong storm ripped through parts of Lyon, Coffey and western Anderson County overnight on August 15, downing trees and damaging structures in a storm path that greatly died out before it reached Garnett and Eastern Anderson County. A number of rural roads were closed in Coffey County into Saturday due to downed trees. Both Lyon-Coffey Electric Coop and KCPL experienced power outages. Additional storms sparked Sunday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights to drop 4.53 inches since August 15 according to the Garnett Municipal Airport, and 11.56 inches for the month.

Anderson County was in deficit precipitation through the first quarter of the year compared to normal averages. April saw the county’s rainfall measurement at about .32 inches above the average of about four inches, but series of May deluges racked up more than 9 inches on top of the normal five or so, to total 14.77 inches according to official measurements for the month. June was about average at 5.7 inches, July nearly two inches less than the normal 4.4.

The instability in the atmosphere will continue to be something we’ll have to deal with, Knapp said.

“Until that changes, the current pattern will repeat itself,” she said. “Again, not necessarily right overhead every night, but repeated nighttime storm development is possible through at least Wednesday of this week.”

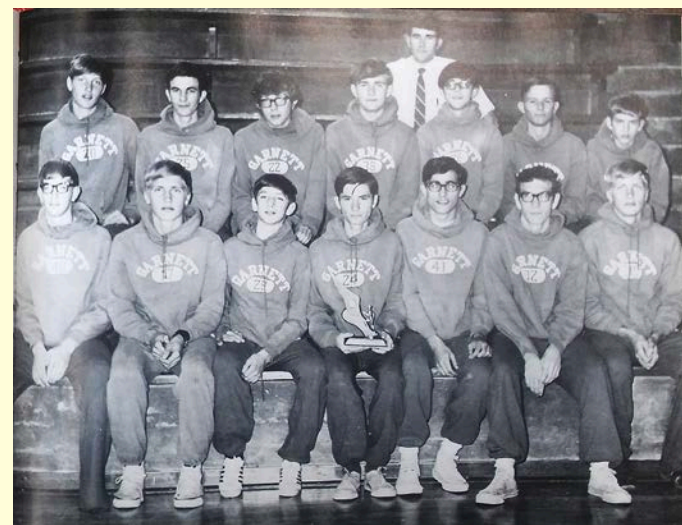

And the pattern doesn’t bode well as cooler weather looms in November and December. At 30 degrees and depending if the precipitation all stays at that temperature, an inch of rain can make 10 inches of snow. Knapp said this year, it’s probably more a question of ‘when’ than ‘if.’

“This pattern is likely to persist that long,” she said.

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – Three’s a charm, let’s hope.

The Anderson County High School’s Jerry Howarter Invitational cross country meet last year was intended to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Garnett CC program – a time to gather with alumni from a half century of cross country teams and to reminisce and trade stories and pay homage to local cross country coaching legend Jerry Howarter – who coached more Garnett and ACHS cross country teams than anyone else so far. It was a special event planned by current cross country coach Mike Sibley as a tribute to all the young men and women who’ve left ality and wealth of local history that may have best defined him. His store became a local hangout for men of his era where news and history were recounted and debated.

"In the winter a lot of the farmers would go down and sit down at Frakers," Singer said of the downtown store. "Quite a few of the guys - and of course they're all gone now too - they'd spend afternoons down there. I don't think they played cards or anything. I think they just sat and talked."

Kenny Kellstadt worked for Fraker part time for more than 20 years. He said Fraker had a commitment to customers and to the public that was always defining. "I remember we were dusting suits one day - you always had to dust them, particularly the shoulders, and we always hated it," Kellstadt said. "This high school kid helping us wasn't doing a very good job and Bud made him start over. He said if it's worth doing, it's worth doing right the first time."

Fraker was honored as the Outstanding Citizen of 2017 by the Anderson County quent taxes requires extensive research of individual parcel ownership and then attempts to determine contact information for those owners in order to notify them. The process is laborious and expensive, with the aim to either catch the taxes up on the properties or to put them in the hands of other owners who will pay the taxes in the future.

The county's last tax sale was in 2016. Anderson County Commissioners have pressed harder over the past decade or so to hold tax sales more frequently in order to capture that stagnated tax revenue.

Publication of the lists serves both to notify possible buyers of the approaching sale and to behind a lot of sweat as they trained on the back roads of rural Anderson County for five decades.

But of course, it rained. Hard.

The meet was cancelled. Sibley rescheduled for the following week - Sept. 7, last year.

That day, it rained again. Harder.

So Sibley put the celebration off a year - to next Thursday, Sept. 5, in fact - to keep the idea alive and to settle the only non-precipitation related controversy in the whole issue.

"There has always been a controversy on whether or not I should have even counted 1969," Sibley said, "since it was three kids and two meets."

The program's initial year in Garnett, when then head coach Ray Meyer came up with the idea and conned a few boys from the track squad into forming a squad to run vast distances in training and get basically no recognition for it - was 1969. The team didn't become an official team and get their team photo in the school yearbook until the following year.

"Coach took them and they

"shame" delinquents into paying, said Doug Anstaett, governmental affairs director for the Kansas Press Association.

"They've (government) recognized the importance of placing those collection notices in the newspaper for more than a century," Anstaett said. "It's always been an effective tool for collecting those back taxes, and I think what you're seeing with your sale is that it still is today," he said.

Counties in Kansas run lists of tax-delinquent properties every August in an attempt to generate revenues from that list. Typically properties processed for foreclosure and sale have been on those August lists for several years.

competed," Sibley said of the 1969 season, "but they were unofficial runners."

Regardless, the recognition is set for next Thursday at the Garnett Country Club. All cross country alumni are invited back to take part in the ceremony and to bring whatever cross country artifacts they'd be willing to put on display at the clubhouse. Junior high runners take off at 3:15 p.m., varsity races start at 5:45 p.m. Compared to acknowledging the anniversary, Sibley said, the rest of the details are superfluous.

"I know it will no longer be the true 50th year that athletes competed for Garnett/Anderson County in this sport," Sibley said in a statement last year to the Review after the second cancellation, when the 2019 rescheduling was set, "but it will be the 50th anniversary of us fielding a full team and competing as a league school."

So regardless of those 50-year-old details, the event is set for Thursday, Sept. 5.

Unless it rains. Then, stay tuned.

Family will greet friends at the church on Thursday evening from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.

Are you concerned about your eternal destiny?

Why are so many of our churches a mile wide and an inch deep spiritually? This is a question that has bothered me for a long time and begs to be answered. I have written in my Bible the following quote without an author. "Most people aren't worried about going to heaven or hell just about being able to hack it on Monday morning."

The breakup of the family and the removal of religion from government, education and business has led to removal of religion from the church. People that go to church hear a 20 or 30 minute sermon on Sunday and that may be it for a week. With only this how will the church produce disciples who then are equipped to go out into the world and make disciples of the people who we spoke of who aren't worried whether they are going to heaven or hell?

In the book of Nehemiah we read how Nehemiah returned from exile in the citadel of Susa to Jerusalem which was in ruins. The people had lost their way and drifted away from the Book of the Law of Moses. Nehemiah had Ezra the scribe assemble all the people and stand on a high platform and read aloud from the Book of the Law to the people. Then Nehemiah did something to fix the mile wide, inch deep knowledge of the assembly.

We read in Nehemiah 8:7-8; "The Levites "instructed the people in the Law while the people were standing there. They read from the Book of the Law of God, making it clear and giving meaning so that the people could understand what was being read." The church must understand that most people who come thru the door and sit in the pew do not understand the radical effect of the fall on man, nor do they know who Abraham was or God's covenant with him and on and on through the Bible. In order for the spiritual knowledge of someone to grow they must understand that salvation can only come thru Jesus Christ as well as the horrible consequences of sin and the certainty of hell if we don't receive Jesus as our personal Savior.

If I might draw a comparison. Why is a cell phone important to people? Because they use it and it provides a benefit to them. Their pool of knowledge concerning the phone is deep. Yet many of those same people are completely unaware that their eternal destiny is at stake and their pool of knowledge concerning Jesus Christ is shallow or non-existent thus exposing them to God's judgment. If things are going to change we must renew our commitment to ministry on God's terms. The church must equip itself for discipleship.

How to make good use of the ugly

REVIEW COMMENTARY

DANE HICKS, Publisher

Crime and cascading murder rates in big cities; homelessness that makes living in the nation's core urban areas threatening and disgusting; Middle Ages-style diseases that now threaten urban populations due to cities which refuse to deal with these problems. They're terrible and growing challenges for America's larger cities, but they may be fabulous opportunities for savvy small towns like those in Kansas.

Word last week of a typhus epidemic brewing among the burgeoning population of homeless in Los Angeles brings both this saddening realization as well as the golden opportunity to the forefront. Crime and squalor have always been worse in America's cities, but they may have finally gotten so bad that businesses, industries and residents of those cities could legitimately be interested in moving to the heartland to escape them. If Kansas' small, dying rural communities could capture a portion of that exodus, it could help rejuvenate our rural landscapes.

But back to how bad it is. Typhus is a bacterial infection caused by rotting, filthy, squalid conditions and overcrowding of humans, passed along by body lice, chiggers and fleas. In LA in particular the outbreak appears to be carried by an explosion in the rat population in the downtown areas where the homeless have what amounts to a stationary occupation force. Health officials say if something isn't done other disease outbreaks will follow, like tuberculosis, plague and potentially measles. The urine, blood and feces of LA's 60,000 homeless washes into the LA River and into the Pacific Ocean each day in what amounts to open sewers reminiscent of Medieval Europe and modern Third World countries.

Caught amid the carnage it has wrought on local businesses, a frustrated hair salon owner in Sacramento on Twitter recently laid the disaster at California Governor Gavin Newsom's feet.

"I have to clean up the poop and pee off my doorstep. I have to clean up the syringes. I have to fight off people who push their way into my shop that are homeless and on drugs because you won't arrest them for drug offenses."

"You wanna make us a sanctuary state. You wanna make it comfortable for everybody except for the people that work hard and have tried their hardest to get along in life," she said.

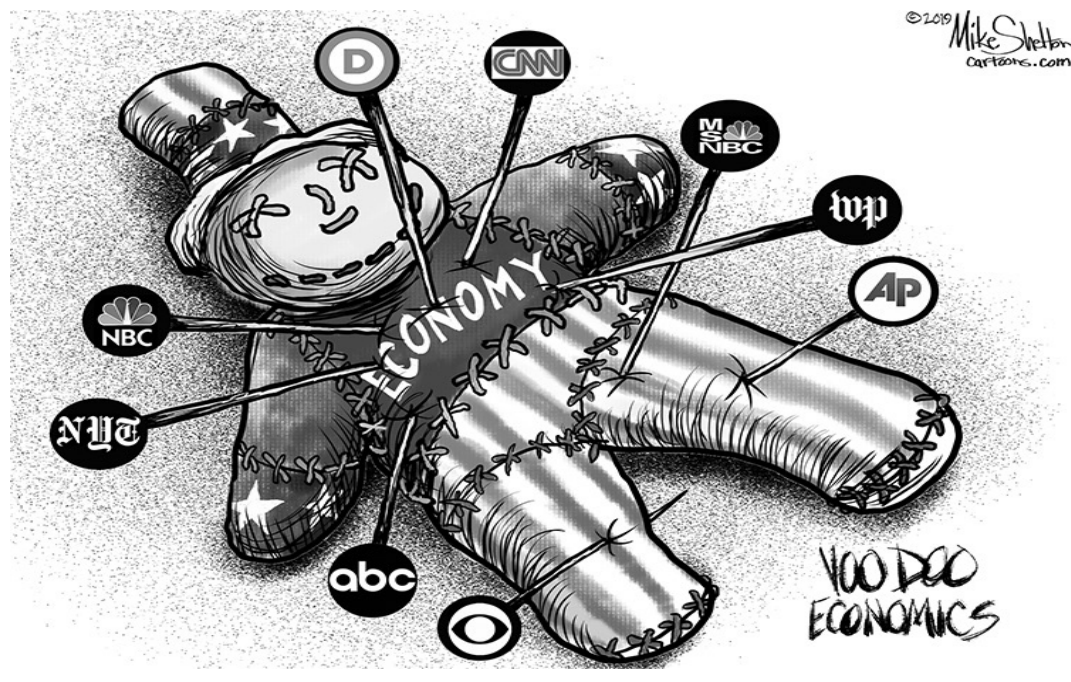

And homelessness is only part of the urban plague that makes life on the plains more inviting. Crime in the most populace cities adds its own dimensions to rural relocation development. According to 2009 population and crime data, St. Louis led the heap in the ranking of violent crime per 100,000 population, followed by Detroit, Baltimore, Memphis and Kansas City. Reports of weekend gun battles that leave several thugs dead and other innocents killed via the misfortune of being caught in the path of stray rounds lends to a harrowing reputation in these cities. Urban areas are places where the risk to oneself or one's family of becoming a victim of violent crime is an ever-present threat.

Rural communities desperate for re-population and development should stop tip-toeing around the unsightliness of using these negatives to market themselves and embrace the opportunities they offer. Marketing campaigns aimed at a defined profile of businesses and residents in urban should be explicit in comparisons between their quality of life and ours. How many people have been killed by street crime this year in Council Grove, Westphalia or Sedan? How many times have you had to step around human excrement while patronizing a downtown business in Arkansas City, Chapman or Clearwater? We know there are commuter jobs, entrepreneurial opportunities and telecommuting possibilities for these businesses and workers in our towns, so what's the holdup?

We brag about our quality of life, but we refuse to use it as leverage.

This is where the meager economic development efforts, transient guest tax funds and the like in the small towns and rural areas of Kansas should be targeted, and we need to get wise to this approach before someone else does. ###

Well, I see in reading the Review that the voters decided the city did not need five commissioners. Thank God. Three commissioners can't make up their mind, so why would they think that five would be any better. I hope this puts an end to this conversation. Now let's see what we can do about getting the roads fixed. Three commissioners can surely come up with the outcome.

Travel trailers at Taylor Forge is stupid. If a person wanted to buy it they would have to spend many thousands of dollars to clean all the dirt up there and replace it before they could use it. Now the city wants to put travel trailers out there, and they probably won't have to do a dang thing.

Is there anybody else in Garnett that every week we have a time that our electricity goes completely out, the refrigerator, TV and everything else, is bothed up? Isn't it about time Garnett woke up and got a decent supplier of electricity? Either that or start up those diesels down there at the power plant. Let's get something going in this city.

I am finding NPR more and more entertaining these days. And incomprehensible. But since I am at the bottom of the intersectionality race, gender and sexual preference, and technically not allowed to participate in these discussions since everyone else's problems are my fault, the constant updating and value-scoring of who is most oppressed ain't of much interest to me. I think it was the Marketplace segment this morning where they spent five minutes interviewing a "lingerie expert" who lauded Victoria's Secret for finally hiring an openly transgender lingerie model, but also lamented it's taken far too long, so she's not awarding them any Woke points. All other major lingerie brands have apparently been doing this for some time already. I think she allowed VS may have been using 'non-openly' TG models, but with no PR touting it, there's no contribution to our common understanding of inclusiveness, so what's the point? She also discussed her new book on lingerie, and explained why she used only non-gendered pronouns throughout: because of course the topic for too long has not acknowledged that all genders should have access to the info and somehow this made reading about it more 'inclusive.' Then, the Morning Edition hosts spent too much time detailing the chicken sandwich twitter war, precipitated by Popeye's finally bringing out their own sandwich, which gave hope to millions of wokesters that they could finally get a good one without the guilt of supporting Chik-Fil-A. I swear, the things so-called journalism uses these days to fill airtime.

Trump appeal on offshore drilling makes sense

GUEST EDITORIAL

ROBERT L. BRADLEY, JR.
Institute for Energy Research

The Trump administration recently appealed a court decision that prohibits offshore development in the Arctic and Atlantic Oceans.

American workers and energy consumers should hope this appeal is successful. Suspending offshore development would entrench the energy policies of the Obama administration, which banned oil and gas exploration throughout the Atlantic.

Federal law requires the Interior Department to publish five-year plans detailing which offshore areas are -- and which ones aren't -- open to energy exploration. Currently, the department is operating under the program the Obama administration approved in its final days, a midnight regulation from a regime with a worldview that was repudiated by voters.

The Trump administration plans to supersede the old directive, which prohibited all energy exploration in the Atlantic Outer Continental Shelf (OCS), the territory between three and 200 nautical miles from the East Coast. But a recent ruling from US District Court Judge Sharon Gleason keeps an Obama-era ban on Atlantic and Arctic offshore development in place.

That's a shame. The Atlantic, in particular, holds the promise of immense energy wealth. Geologists don't know exactly how much oil and natural gas lies beneath the ocean floor because the Atlantic OCS hasn't been surveyed in three decades. But the Bureau of Ocean Energy estimates the region may contain more than 4.5 billion barrels of oil and more than 38 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, a quantity greater than Americans used all last year.

In the Atlantic alone, offshore energy development could produce the equivalent of 1.3 million barrels of oil per day -- equal to 70 percent of current production from the Gulf of Mexico.

Tapping such resources would rev the economy and could beget an estimated $20 billion or more in annual private investment within two decades.

A five-year program under the Trump administration would likely expand exploration of the Alaskan and Eastern Gulf Shore OCS territories, too.

This exploration comes with many benefits. In Virginia, offshore energy is expected to create 25,000 positions. South Carolina should see 30,000 new positions. All told, offshore energy development in the Atlantic alone should generate 280,000 positions.

Even more impressive? The average worker in the oil and natural gas industry jobs earns more than $100,000 per year.

State coffers will also see an influx of cash. Within 20 years, Virginia should see $2 billion in cumulative new tax revenue; South Carolina should see $3.8 billion.

The nation can't afford to continue the Obama administration's "leave-it-in-the-ground" approach to energy. By restricting drilling permits to the Gulf of Mexico and Alaska OCS areas -- and thus leaving 94 percent of federal territories off-limits -- federal leasing revenues dropped nearly 85 percent from 2008 to 2016. Jobs that would have been created -- and tax revenues that would have poured in -- simply didn't materialize.

President Obama's policies have prevented Americans from enjoying their offshore energy wealth for far too long. If its appeal is successful, the Trump administration can put an end to this senselessness by moving forward with its offshore plan -- and including the Atlantic in it.

- Robert L. Bradley Jr. is the founder and CEO of the Institute for Energy Research.

Throwing America under the racist bus

NATIONAL COMMENTARY

RICH LOWRY, King Features Syndicate

Beto O'Rourke has taken the measure of America and found it wanting.

"This country, though we would like to think otherwise," he intoned, "was founded on racism, has persisted through racism and is racist today."

This is now a mainstream sentiment in the Democratic Party. Bernie Sanders said earlier this year that the United States was "created" in large part "on racist principles." The New York Times has begun the so-called 1619 Project, marking the 400th anniversary of the importation of slaves from Africa.

The series seeks nothing less than "to reframe the country's history, understanding 1619 as our true founding, and placing the consequences of slavery and the contributions of black Americans at the very center of the story we tell ourselves about who we are."

It is certainly true that an American nation existed prior to the Declaration of Independence in 1776 and slavery was its great sin, with permutations still felt today. But to pretend that racism is the essence of America and constituted one of the country's founding principles is an odious and reductive lie.

It doesn't explain why any reference to slavery was kept out of the Constitution. James Madison, per his notes during the drafting convention, "thought it wrong to admit in the Constitution the idea that there could be property in men." The careful avoidance of the term was subsequently used to buttress the position of opponents of slavery from

John Quincy Adams to Abraham Lincoln to Frederick Douglass. The great black abolitionist asked, "if the Constitution were intended to be, by its framers and adopters, a slave-holding instrument, why neither slavery, slave-holding, nor slave can anywhere be found in it?"

Of course, in crucial respects the Constitution was indeed a compromise with slaveholders. It's not clear why it would be considered better if, in the absence of such a compromise, slave states had possibly gone their own way to create a rump nation-state wholly devoted to slavery and not yoked to a North that became more anti-slavery over time.

"The Revolution suddenly and effectively ended the cultural climate that had allowed black slavery, as well as other forms of bondage and unfreedom, to exist throughout the colonial period without serious challenge," the historian Gordon Wood writes. In his view, it set in motion the "ideological and social forces" that eventually led to the Civil War.

In the broadest gauge, it's a mistake to treat the United States as an outlier in terms of its racial attitudes, when it was really an outlier in its (imperfect) embrace of liberty.

"Europeans did not outdo others in enslaving people or treating slaves viciously," the late historians Elizabeth Fox-Genovese and Eugene Genovese observed. "They outdid others by creating a Christian civilization that eventually stirred moral condemnation of slavery and roused mass movements against it."

"Today we ask: How could Christians or any civilized people have lived with themselves as slaveholders? But the historically appropriate question is: What, after millennia of general acceptance, made Christians -- and, subsequently, those of other faiths -- judge slavery an enormity not to be endured?" It's not a question anyone running in the Democratic presidential primaries, or editing The New York Times, is inclined to ask.

Part II - Excavating at Crystal Lake in Garnett

If you remember, last week I was seeking permission to start a new archaeological project at Crystal Lake here in Garnett. On Thursday morning 20 June 2019 I was granted that permission. It was only a matter of a few minutes until I had my tools/supplies gathered up and on my way to the South Lake. I had been given permission to place and excavate eight 4x4 meter grids over the eight positive shovel test holes. I was also given only one week to complete this project. So in the next seven days if you drove around the lake you could see my head bobbing up and down as I was excavating these grids.

Here's how my project was accomplished. First I would put down four corner stakes and string forming a 4x4 meter square over each shovel test hole. My next step was remove the top sod and put it to one side, so that it could be re-laid at the completion of each grid. After the sod was removed I began my excavations by using my hand trowel. Every artifact was recovered. I soon found out there was a band between 6-8 inches deep that contained almost all the artifacts in it. Due to the one week time limit to do this project no artifacts were measured in or records kept. This was actually a recovery artifact project only.

At the completion of each grid, the artifacts were taken home cleaned and a picture was taken. This was the procedure followed for all eight grids.

There were only two things left for me to do before completion of this project.

Number one was to send pictures of each grids finds to the State of Kansas Archaeologists, the President of KAA and to the City of Garnett. The second thing took place on the evening of July 11th 2019, when I presented the artifacts to the Anderson County Historical Society. A number of these artifacts may be seen in the Anderson County Museum.

There is a chance that further excavations of this site may be conducted at a later date.

2009: Iola man killed north of Colony in fiery crash

August 2009

Officers with the Anderson County Sheriff's Department, along with the help of several other state and local agencies, are investigating the death of an Iola man whose body was found burned in a pickup truck north of Colony. Anderson County Sheriff Scot Brownrigg said a call was received around 1 a.m. on Friday and the scene of the accident appeared that the truck had struck a row of hay bales and caught on fire. A body was found inside the cab of the truck. That body was later identified as 70-year-old John D. Stoneking, Sr. of Iola. Brownrigg said a preliminary report suggested that Stoneking may have died from smoke inhalation.

August 1999

A trip to watch a Thursday night meteor shower at the Cedar Valley Reservoir turned tragic for three area teenagers, when the truck that was to have been their vantage point for the astronomical event rolled over a cliff and into the lake, killing a 13-year-old Garnett girl who was inside. A Kansas Highway Patrol spokesperson said Jennifer J. Barr, 13, of Garnett, died around 11:15 p.m. Thursday when the parked 1989 Nissan four-wheel drive pickup she was sitting in near the CVR around a dock, boat ramp, picnic, and sunning beach construction. But city planners fear the construction of the sunning beach close to the water will promote illegal swimming at the lake, and no one seems to be sure how liable the city would be should a swimming accident occur. Though swimming is prohibited due to liability fears, water-skiing and boating are allowed at the lake.

August 1979

For the second straight year, a Pittsburg State University student will take part in nationally televised recognition to try to get southeast Kansas contributions for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. The occasion is the annual Jerry Lewis telethon at the Sahara Hotel in Las Vegas and the student is Kathy Brummel, a senior in office administration at Pittsburg State University but who is from Garnett. The main fund raising effort of the sorority which Brummel is a part of, is a 36-hour dance marathon at the student union. Couples obtain pledges based on the number of hours danced and numerous area individuals and merchants contribute supplies, services, and money to the event.

Recent talks on development of Garnett's Cedar Valley Reservoir seem to hinge to a great degree on whether or not the city plans to allow swimming at the lake sometime in the future. Recent proposals by the lake's advisory board for new road and outing area development have focused

USDA invests in energy efficiency improvements to help rural areas

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19, 2019 - Rural Business-Cooperative Service Administrator Bette Brand today announced that the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) is awarding grants for projects in all states and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico to reduce energy costs (PDF, 216 KB) for farmers, ag producers and rural-based businesses and institutions.

"Lowering energy costs helps rural businesses improve their bottom line and create jobs," Brand said. "Under the leadership of President Trump and Agriculture Secretary Perdue, USDA is committed to increasing economic development in America's rural communities through strong partnerships because when rural America thrives, all of America thrives."

Under today's announcement, USDA is investing $9.3 million through the Rural Energy for America Program (REAP) for renewable energy and energy efficiency projects across the nation. Congress appropriated $50 million for REAP grants and loan guarantees in fiscal year 2019. USDA will make additional funding announcements in the REAP program in coming weeks.

Recipients can use REAP funding for a variety of needs, such as conducting energy audits and installing renewable energy systems such as biomass, geothermal, hydro-power and solar. Funds also can be used to make energy efficiency improvements to heating, ventilation and cooling systems; insulation; and lighting and refrigeration. Listed below are a few examples of how farmers, rural business owners and institutions are making investments in their operations through REAP.

In Soldotna, Alaska, River City Books will use a $13,525 REAP grant to build a 15-kilowatt solar photovoltaic system on the roof of its bookstore. This project is expected to lower the store's electricity costs by an estimated $3,800 annually. The energy saved by this project is enough to power 2.5 homes for a year.

Copper Cricket Farm LLC in Machipongo, Va., will use an $8,172 grant to purchase and install a 11.06-kilowatt, roof-mounted solar array. The farm produces vegetables, fruits and flowers in Northampton County, Va. This project will make the farm energy self-sufficient.

Tony Dwyer's Logging LLC in St. Johnsbury, Vt., will use a $12,465 REAP grant to install a more efficient kiln drying system for a firewood producer. Tony Dwyer's Logging produces high-quality, kiln-dried firewood. The new kiln, which will run on propane, will reduce the cost of processing a cord of wood by 40 percent.

In Albany, Ore., Spring Hill Organic Farm will use a $10,915 REAP grant to purchase and install a renewable energy system. The farm raises a variety of organic vegetables for commercial resale. This project will generate more than 27,000 kilowatt-hours of renewable electricity per year. The 25-kilowatt solar array will replace 39 percent of the farm's energy use and reduce its utility bill by more than $3,000 per year.

In April 2017, President Donald J. Trump established the Interagency Task Force on Agriculture and Rural Prosperity to identify legislative, regulatory and policy changes that could promote agriculture and prosperity in rural communities. In January 2018, Secretary Perdue presented the Task Force's findings to President Trump. These findings included 31 recommendations to align the federal government with state, local and tribal governments to take advantage of opportunities that exist in rural America. Supporting the rural workforce was a cornerstone recommendation of the task force.

included. The project started in 2012 but stalled after concerns about name misspellings and other details which at the time were planned to be etched into granite slabs and were virtually irreversible. The committee and county commissioners revised the plan last year to use electronic kiosks with viewing screens which tap into computer records showing various information about those etched instead of just their etched name. The project had raised some $480,000 through early this year via donations, memorial bricks and a small county tax levy. Names can still be submitted and memorial bricks are still being sold for the plaza area on which the memorial will sit. ## Finesse your client over dinner

HOW TO SELL STUFF

Dane Hicks
Review Publisher

Napoleon said an army travels on its stomach. I apply this to business with the thinking that a business lunch or dinner can be a fantastic way of establishing or cementing a relationship with a potential or present client. If done correctly it can go a long way toward helping you sell stuff.

Intuit's QuickBooks website gives these important pointers:

Schedule: Schedule the dinner or lunch at a time that's convenient to the client. Make sure that you're available and can be there without interruptions. Don't ask a client to lunch and then talk on the phone or text the entire time, and worse yet, avoid cancelling at all costs.

Pay up front: Don't allow the clumsiness of the check hitting the table. Arrive early and tell the waiter/waitress you're providing your credit card in advance and they're welcome to add their tip and run the tab when completed. Of course, you make sure to set the meeting at a restaurant where you know the staff and know what to expect from them - as well as the kitchen.

Get there early: Don't take a chance of arriving late for your own invitation. Fifteen minutes is a good rule of thumb.

Small talk: Let your guest set the pace for conversation. Don't just jump right into business talk - small talk until the meal is done unless your guest wants to cut to the chase. Small talk is no big deal, because you have already researched your invitee and you know some of his interests, hobbies, sports, other company projects and activities, etc.

Follow his/her pace: Intuit says: "Remember, this dinner is all about what makes your customer feel relaxed and comfortable. Measure how quickly you eat by his or her example. (You want to avoid sitting before an empty plate while your guest is still eating or continuing to eat after your guest has finished.)"

Booze or no?: A cocktail or glass of wine can be a relaxing influence, but don't let it get out of hand. The rule is two drinks at the most, and only after you offer the option to your client. If he declines, so should you.

Follow up: Follow up the next day with an email addressing business issues that came up or offering to answer any other questions. Do this regardless of the outcome of the meeting.

With a little effort a business lunch/dinner can be very fruitful and fun, and another weapon in your "how to sell stuff" arsenal.

Colony Christian Church - "Father Knows Best"

Communion Meditation was given by Howard Reiter, titled "Father Knows Best". 2 Samuel 16:5-12, tells us a story of David, and how a relative of Saul's hurled rocks at him and called him a murderer. David did not retaliate, and would not let his men retaliate. He said that if God told the man to curse him, who are they to stop him. Shouldn't we all live like that? Not seeking our own revenge, but waiting on the Lord for his vindication? And as the years go by, we should find ourselves less and less concerned about what others think about us. Live for God!

Pastor Chase Riebel gave the sermon on "Can We Be The Good?" We should share the hope and love of Jesus with everyone. Our life is like a battle. We either: 1. Look at the battle and do nothing, 2. Choose to go thru the battle on our own, even though we don't know how to fight it, 3. Choose others to help us that have never been thru a battle, or 4. Choose soldiers for help, those that have been thru the battle and know what to do. We must go out and help those who aren't moving forward, who are going alone, or with others who don't know what they're doing. We are the soldiers of God, and need to work for the good of His Kingdom! Be the Good! (Ref: Romans 3:10-12, Titus 2:11-14 & 3:4-7, Matthew 20:28, Galatians 5:13, 21-23 & 6:9-10, 2 Peter 3:9-10 & 3:14-15, Matthew 9:36-38 & 25:21) You can hear the sermon in its entirety at <http://www.colonychristianchurch.org>, or thru a podcast app.

Longtime ag radio hosts retires

Glenn Brunkow, Pottawatomie County farmer and rancher

There are very few constants in life but the one thing that remained constant for me growing up and into adulthood was the morning show on WIBW with ag programming brought to our house by Kelly Lenz. I grew up eating breakfast while learning about the latest in ag news and notes, not just occasionally but every morning. He was almost like one of the family.

That was why I paused for a moment last week when Kelly announced he was retiring after 41 years on the radio. That was four decades of farm crisis, weather, embargoes, tariffs and a few good times mixed in, all described by the warm, familiar voice coming across the radio on our counter. Mornings meant coffee, eggs and Kelly.

When I was an Extension agriculture agent, one of my best moments came the first time Kelly asked me to be on "Ag Issues." I felt like I had arrived. The truth of the matter was Kelly was a huge supporter of Extension, and he was always willing to help promote meetings or get timely information out to our producers. I also had the privilege of hosting several meetings with Kelly, and I always felt like my time with him was like being at the feet of a guru.

When I left Extension to farm, I wondered if he would remember who I was. After all, he met so many people over the years and most were far more memorable or important than me. Much to my surprise the first time I saw him after my career change not only did he know me, but he cared about what I had been up to. That never changed over time.

The secret to Kelly's success was that he was one of us - a farm boy from Iowa - and that was something he never forgot. He knew what it was like to get up way before dawn on a bitter cold morning to milk cows or to sit on a tractor seat in the blistering August heat. He understood pouring your heart and soul into the farm because that is what he did every morning in his studio. I have known few who were as knowledgeable about such a wide array of topics involving agriculture. Farmers and ranchers were his audience and he kept us informed.

It's going to be hard for me to imagine the airwaves without Kelly. No one outside of a dairy farmer has more richly earned the right to sleep late. Although like most retired dairy farmers, I suspect Kelly will still wake up long before the sun each morning out of habit. My friend I hope you understand just how much you have contributed and improved agriculture in Kansas and, more importantly, how much we appreciated it. I hope you enjoy a long, happy retirement; it is well deserved.

'Limousin Today' purchase finalized

The Board of Directors of the North American Limousin Foundation and the Limousin365 ownership group have reached an agreement regarding the purchase of the official breed publication, Limousin Today. The purchase was finalized at the Foundations' August board meeting.

Gary Fuchs, NALF Board of Directors President, said "the sale is viewed by the current NALF board as a team effort between the Foundation and Limousin365 to provide services to the membership regarding the promotion of Limousin and Lim-Flex® cattle to effectively grow the breed."

NALF Executive Director Mark Anderson added, "the sale of the magazine allows the Foundation to concentrate on maintaining the quality and accuracy of the herdbook. Membership utilization of the animal recording and DNA services provided by the Foundation will enable them to capitalize on the genomic information and the new single-step cattle evaluation for more accurate EPDs."

Under the terms of the agreement, Limousin Today will be rebranded Limousin365. The planned initial publication date is January 1, 2020.

"The Limousin365 ownership group is excited to take over the management of the breed's official publication and look forward to working closely with the Foundation and its breeders to promote the Limousin breed through this valuable breed marketing tool," said Kiley McKinna, ownership partner of Limousin365. "Our team will strive to uphold the high standards set forth for the publication which has proudly been the flagship promotional piece for the breed for nearly half a century."

For more information about NALJA, the North American Limousin Foundation, or to locate a Limousin or Lim-Flex breeder near you, visit www.NALF.org or call 303-220-1693.

New exhibit on display at the Walker Art Gallery in the Garnett Public Library

The NOTO Arts and Entertainment District is the vibrant heartbeat of North Topeka that offers fine art experiences, unique shops, and exceptional local restaurants.

Home to many galleries and studios, NOTO attracts an array of art forms from local artists and the region beyond.

Kansans can win books in photo contest

EMPORIA, KS - Kansans taking pictures of themselves can take part in a photo contest during Kansas Literacy Week, September 1-7.

"Everyone can participate - families, libraries, daycares, public, private, home schools," said Tasia Markowitz, Assistant Director of the Kansas Masonic Literacy Center, the organization behind the contest. "We'll draw names and each winner will get $100 of books that they can choose from. It's not limited to families, schools, and libraries. Businesses, after school programs, and senior centers are welcome, too!"

The contest will take place Tuesday, September 3 through Friday, September 6. People wanting to participate are to take pictures portraying the theme of each day:

•Tuesday, Sept. 3 - Book Buddy Day - Read with a buddy.

•Wednesday, Sept. 4 - Read My Shirt Day - Wear a shirt with words or pictures.

•Thursday, Sept. 5 - Cozy Up with a Good Book - Wear pajamas and read a favorite book.

•Friday, Sept. 6 - Fun in the Sun - Grab your shades, beach blankets, chairs and umbrellas and head outside to read under the sun.

"People can take their photo and post it to us through Facebook to enter the contest," Markowitz said. Photos posted need to tag @KMLCESU with in Facebook to be submitted into the contest. "On Friday, September 6, we'll choose at random a winner from each day and contact them through social media. The winners and KMLC will communicate which books the winner would like to receive and we will get the books to them."

As this is a photo contest, Markowitz said it was important for people to note that the photos entered may be subject to use for further promotion of KMLC and organizations should follow the organization's photo permission policies.

Kansas Literacy Week is sponsored by the Kansas Masonic Literacy Center.
