ACHS student sweeps events at 4-H Western Heritage event in CA

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

WINTON, Calif. - High noon. Shoppers on the wooden sidewalks scurry for cover inside the frame-built downtown businesses lining the street. The spurs of two cowboys jingle with their every slow, deliberate step toward each other to meet in the center of town, twenty-five feet apart. Their right hands hover over the handgrip of their holstered weapons, slowly stretching. In a quick motion one hand flips toward its hog leg, and ...

It's the kind of scene that played out for real - well, sort of - for ACHS freshman Addison Smith earlier this summer, when he swept all three categories of competition in the Western Heritage Project 4-H shooting contest held in Winton, Calif., about a hundred miles southeast of Sacramento.

The 4H Western Heritage Program is an immersion course in Old West study coupled with one of the fastest-growing shooting sports disciplines in the world - western action shooting. Competitors fire replica western firearms from the 1860-1899 period, dress the part in Old West regalia, and learn the history both fact and fiction of the American Old West. The competitions entail scoring on 100 rounds of rifle, 100 rounds of pistol and 25 rounds of shotgun shooting, which totals half the competitor's overall score. For Addison the move into western life and competitive shooting started with hunting.

"I've been hunting since I was really little," he said. "About four years ago my grandpa and I met the shooting instructor, and he was telling us about the last one (competition) and how well they did. We thought it was something that sounded interesting."

Twenty-five percent of their overall score is an evaluation of their western persona, or character they develop through both narrative and costume. The other 25 percent of scoring is a historical test over both the period and the location where the conference is held. Addison created a persona of a Kansas wolf tracker and guide who leads settlers from Canada to Texas. He said he wasn't particularly a history buff until he started studying the old west.

The period typically referred to as the Era of the Great West is usually defined as starting after the Civil War in 1865 and running through the early 1900s, as railroads expanded across the country and settlement of various western real estate was affirmed. The cattle industry developed as beef were driven across expanses of territory to rail heads and on to markets back east. Cowboys came about and so did cow towns - some of which survived and some didn't.

"I wasn't really into it much before I started," he said. "But you learn gun identification and all types of old time guns. Every year they give you something new to study."

Addison uses two .22 caliber pistols and a .22 caliber rifle, as well as a 12 gauge shotgun in his competitions. Ten separate stages of timed shooting are completed to offer course in making your business a destination in itself

County ecodevo group

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - Local businesses hoping to learn ways to become a "destination business" have the opportunity to get specialized training in a seven-week course to be presented by the Anderson County Development Agency.

ACDA Director Julie Turnipseed will conduct the classes, modeled after business consultant Jon Schallert's program, designed to teach a street-level approach to developing and promoting businesses as their own novel, unique destinations for shoppers and tourists.

"The training will provide information on how to make a business a Destination Business," Turnipseed said. "Throughout the class participants will learn solutions, best practices and the challenges and changes a business must make today to remain viable, successful and profitable."

The destination business concept revolves around a store developing and promoting its own unique positioning in a way that's sustainable and profitable. A good local example was Goodies Antiques, which operated for years on the north side of the Garnett Square and was known as a draw for antiques and interesting décor all around the region.

But maybe the classic example of a destination business is Wall Drug, just outside tiny Wall, S.D., population 872, off I-90 as the highway stretches across the barren badlands of South Dakota. Ted and Dorothy Husted bought the store in 1931 in the throes of the Depression. They almost lost their shirts, but then they struck on the idea of offering free ice water to highway travelers at their store. Wall Drug now offers dining, gifts, activities and souvenirs. Some 2 million people a year visit there.

In the training course, interested business people will learn:

- New tactics that can help grow a business;
- How to create a powerful unique difference in your business;
- How to target the very best most profitable consumers;
- Product spotlight techniques;
- How to attract business from outside the area;
- Creating ultra-service & a customer focused company;

Huss: open meetings law hampers commissioners

Law keeps officials from better, expedient government, she says

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT - City commissioner Brigitte Brecheisen-Huss took aim at the Kansas Open Meetings Act during her comments on the outcome of the recent charter ordinance vote to add two commissioners to the Garnett City Commission, saying KOMA encumbrances on a three-member elected body make it impossible for commissioners to discuss city business outside of public meetings.

Huss said it was this awkwardness regarding the interaction of commissioners according to the law that primarily fueled her initiative to support the issue on an advisory ballot in the 2018 general election, not necessarily the idea that five commissioners would allow more representation to citizens, as was widely reported in the local media.

"As a three member body that means we are not allowed to talk to anyone on the commission (outside public meetings)," Huss said. "It was ignored in the newspapers. That's problematic when you expect your leaders to come here and to lead and they can't talk to each other."

Among other things, the

Kansas Open Meetings Act forbids a quorum of elected officials from discussing official business outside meetings that the public can attend, in order to ensure the formulation of policy and decisions is done with public knowledge.

Huss made similar comments in a May 8, 2018, address to fellow commissioners at a regular commission meeting, noting the law did not allow any members of a three member governing body to discuss city affairs outside a public meeting because even a minimal discussion would be a quorum of the body, and illegal under the law. She said a five member body would allow sets of commissioners to discuss city business outside of public meetings, and make it easier for them to define each others thoughts on issues and make more expedient decisions.

"I could not agree more with the intent of this act," Huss told commissioners in the 2018 address. "However it does present significant challenges to a three member commission. As soon as I was sworn in as a commissioner, the only time I could have a conversation relating to city affairs was at a meeting every two weeks."

That thwarted communication kept commissioners from leading with more gusto, Huss told commissioners, and it allowed too much authority to default to the city manager, giving the impression the commission was only a "rubber stamp."

But Doug Anstaett, former executive director of the Kansas Press Association and now the organization's lobbyist, said the KOMA was designed specifically to prevent elected officials from formulating decisions beyond the ear of the public.

"I'm sorry that this pesky requirement gets in the way when public officials want to hide their conversations from those who elected them," Anstaett said. "However, this law was written by legislators 35 years ago to hold every elected official in Kansas to a level of transparency that would increase the trust of citizens in their government."

Huss and commissioner Greg Gwin embraced the 2018 advisory vote and set a charter ordinance in motion to make the change to five commissioners, but commissioner Jody Cole led a petition drive against the measure to force a mail ballot vote earlier this month. That vote saw the measure fall 494-285, with some 1,100 registered voters refusing to take part by returning their ballots.

Huss lamented the large number of decided non-participants, saying the city should undertake education efforts and voter initiatives to increase interest in elections and voter participation.

Garnett Library's September book discussion to be the 25th

The Garnett Library will hold the next book Discussion on Wednesday, September 25th at 7pm.

The book discussions are led by Paulabeth Henderson and are held on the fourth Wednesday of each month in the Archer Room.

"At the Water's Edge", fiction novel, by Sara Gruen will be used for the September discussion.

In this new novel from the author of the #1 New York Times best seller Water for Elephants, Sara Gruen again demonstrates her talent for creating spellbinding period pieces. In At the Water's Edge, she tells the gripping and poignant story of a privileged young woman's moral and sexual awakening as she experiences the devastations of World War II in the Scottish Highlands.

Madeline Hyde, a young socialite from Philadelphia, reluctantly follows her husband and their best friend to the tiny village of Drumnadrochit in search of the Loch Ness monster—at the same time that a very real monster, Hitler, wages war against the Allied Forces. Despite German warplanes flying overhead and scarce food rations (and even scarcer stockings), what Maddie discovers—about her world and about herself—through the unlikely friendships she develops with the villagers, opens her eyes not only to the dark forces that exist around her but to the beauty and surprising possibilities as well.

Refreshments will be served. Hope you can join us.

Rock-Chalk, cash talks, Chick-fil-A

Loose-screw liberal faculty and staff at the University of Kansas are throwing a hissy-fit over a plan by the university to move the campus Chick-fil-A from the The Underground dining area at Wescoe Hall to the Kansas Union.

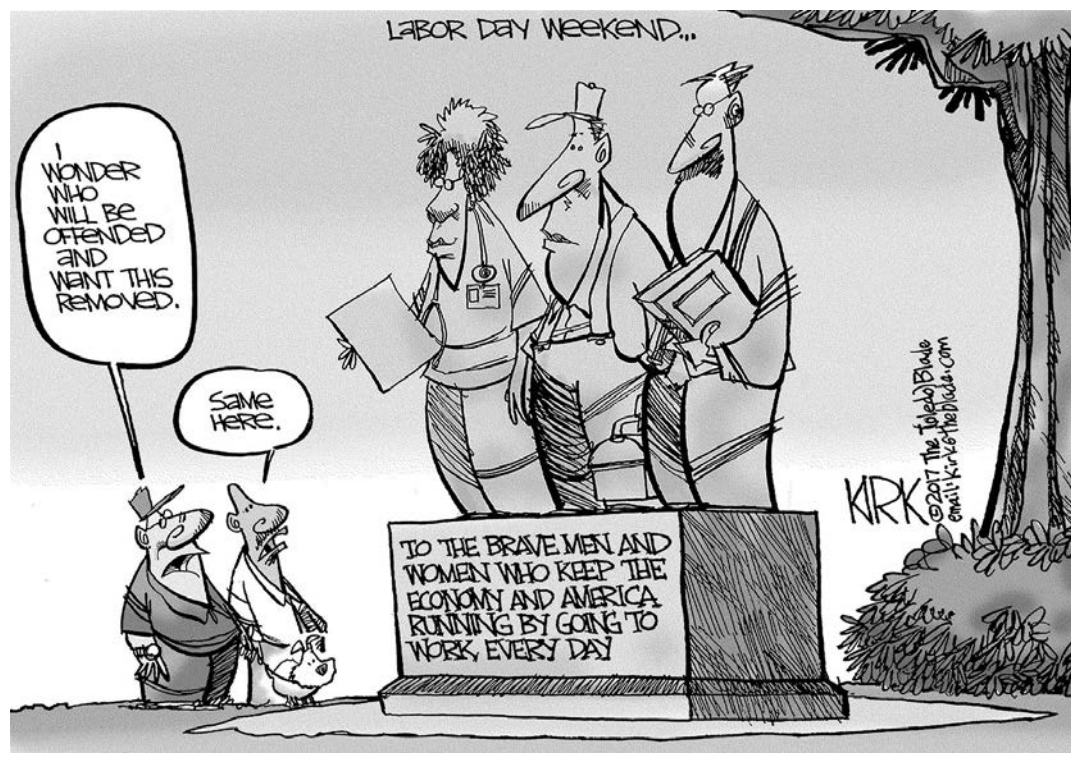

For once, credit is due the KU senior management, which responded to the effect that the university had an existing 10-year contract with the franchise that mandated certain upgrades, and that moving it to the Union from Wescoe was cheaper.

Now, keep in mind Chick-fil-A was already on campus, no doubt paying major sponsor fees or high-dollar lease payments to secure its location at Wescoe Hall. What riles this Circus Act Sex Brigade is that the university is cozying up to Chick-fil-A with a plumb location and even a "Chick-fil-A Coin Toss" and a "Chick-fil-A Home Opener" at the recent KU football game.

But of course time goes on. No one is really surprised anymore at these fits by those determined to force your acceptance of their views, no matter how contrary to your own beliefs or morale compass.

For that, the franchise is knighted the "bastion of bigotry," by the bastion of confused sex teachers, a name I just coined and which admittedly does not roll off the tongue nearly as well.

More and more we watch as the college culture in the country degrades further and further from open acceptance of differing views, particularly Christian views, when indeed that tolerance and insight is one of the things we spend megga bucks to send junior to college to learn to grasp in the first place. ###

These storms have been pretty hard on all those sponsor banners on the south fence at the Legion Field in Garnett. Half of them are hanging off and some have disappeared altogether.

It sure looks ratty and I'm sure the sponsors who paid for them would like to see a little better care taken of them for the money they spent. Somebody needs to take them down anyway, baseball season or the fair or whatever is over. Fold them up and keep them for next year. Thank you.

So they're going to do bull riding again this year in Garnett. If they're looking for people to ride bulls, I nominate (name deleted). Wouldn't be the nastiest think he ever rode, that's for sure.

Many thanks to the person who cleaned the mud and rocks off of the rail trail from First Street to Third Street. So nice to walk and bike and having it clean. Thank you so much.

Tom Adams did an excellent job fixing the north lake road when it washed out. So nice having it open again.

Yeah, after the storm Thursday night with all the limbs down in the street and people driving around them. So, I cleaned them up and took them to the landfill and they still charged me $4 to dump them after a storm. That's kind of bad in this town.

The New York Times is irredeemable and must die

Even before The New York Times launched its "All Slavery, All the Time" project, no one could accuse that paper of skimping on its race coverage, particularly stories about black males killed by white(ish) police officers.

ANNE COULTER, COMMENTATOR

Here's one you haven't heard about. I happened upon it by sheer accident.

Antwon Rose II was a 17-year-old boy shot by an East Pittsburgh police officer in June 2018 after he bolted from a jitney car that had been stopped by the officer. The Times published about a half-dozen stories on Antwon Rose — or as the Times calls him, "Antwon, who was unarmed."

After the officer was acquitted on all charges in March of this year, the Times ran an article by Adeel Hassan on the verdict.

Here's what you would learn from the Times:

- Antwon was unarmed.
— Antwon "was in his high school's honors program."
— Antwon "played basketball and the saxophone."
— Antwon "volunteered for a local charity."
— In 2016, Antwon wrote a poem titled, "I Am Not What You Think!" which included these lines:

"I see mothers bury their sons; I want my Mom to never feel that pain."

— A policeman stopped the gold Chevy Cruze Antwon "was riding in" because it "matched the description" of a car "involved" in a drive-by shooting minutes earlier.

— The jury consisted of nine whites and three African Americans.

If you read the Times piece, all you would know is that an honor student who loved his mom... was KILLED for the crime of riding in a car similar to one that had just been used in a crime.

Wow. Just wow. Here are some of the facts the Times left out:

- The gold Chevy Cruze Antwon fled did not merely "match the description of" a car used in a drive-by shooting: It was the car used in the drive-by shooting, as proved by surveillance video posted online days after the shooting and shown to the jury.
— The video shows 13 shots being fired from the back seat of that exact car, with — according to the prosecutor — Antwon riding in the front seat.

— The backseat passenger, Zaijuan Hester, later pleaded guilty to the drive-by shooting.

— One of the victims of the drive-by shooting told police it was Antwon who shot him. "The beef was between me and him," William Ross told a Pennsylvania State Police officer. "That car came by, he shot me, I ran to the store."

— The jitney driver told police that, right before the shooting started, he heard the back-seat passenger ask, "Is that him?"

— The gun used in the drive-by was recovered in the back seat of the car.

— A stolen gun was found under Antwon's seat, an empty magazine in Antwon's pants pocket, and there was gunpowder residue on Antwon's hands.

— The car stopped by the officer was riddled with bullet holes.

— The jury that unanimously acquitted the officer was led by an African American foreman, who stoutly defended the verdict.

None of that made it into the Times story on the trial's conclusion.

I'm glad that Antwon did charity work, but isn't it rather more important that he had participated in a drive-by shooting of two other black guys 13 minutes before being stopped by a police officer?

That's not conjecture or speculation. Hassan wasn't writing about the case the day after the shooting. These are facts that were presented in court and copiously reported by the local media — even in the British press.

Normal Person to The New York Times: Why did you say the car "matched the description" of the car used in a drive-by shooting — but not say that it WAS the car used in the drive-by shooting?

NYT: I'm sorry, who are you and do you have a press pass?

Normal Person: You didn't mention that a stolen gun was found under Antwon's seat and a matching cartridge in Antwon's pocket???

NYT: We only have so much space and I needed room for Antwon's poem.

Normal Person: You didn't have space to say that gun residue was found on Antwon's hands?

NYT: I could have run more of the poem. It was a good poem.

Normal Person: Or that one of the victims of the drive-by said Antwon was the one who shot him?

NYT: The officer didn't know that.

Normal Person: Did the officer know about Antwon's A.P. classes? It goes to the likelihood of his behavior being perceived as threatening. The officer could certainly see that the car's back window had been shot out.

NYT: You're a white supremacist and white nationalist and, yes, I know they're different, but you're both.

There's no reason to think this isn't standard operating procedure at the Times. The editors can't say, OK, OK, that one got past us!

The Times has told wild lies about the racist shooting of Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri (false), the racist arrest of Freddie Gray in Baltimore (false), the racist shooting of Trayvon Martin in Florida (false), the racist gang-rape of a black stripper by a Duke lacrosse team (false) and so on.

Antwon Rose's shooting wasn't even a flood-the-zone, hair-on-fire story. But the Times lied about it, too.

This is a newspaper that cannot be trusted on anything touching on race. They're liars and ideologues, not reporters and editors.

Trump understands one of our greatest threats is China

President Trump's latest foray into the world of international economics — his ongoing trade war with China — has been widely derided by his critics. It's been derided on the grounds that there is no long-term strategy; on the grounds that the trade war will not be, as Trump has bragged, "good and easy to win"; on the grounds that Trump continues to send mixed signals, simultaneously claiming that China is bearing the brunt of his tariffs while desperately urging Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell to lower interest rates.

BEN SHAPIRO, THE DAILY WIRE

Now, Trump's trade policy may not be well-considered. His understanding of trade is rudimentary at best — he still operates under the assumption that mutually beneficial trade is actually a zero-sum game. And Trump's rhetoric may be confusing — it's unclear whether Trump wants tariffs or wants to alleviate them. But Trump does have one thing absolutely right: China is an imperturbable geopolitical foe. And the United States ought to be taking a serious look at a long-term strategy to contain and then reverse the dominance of the totalitarian communist regime.

of Dengism — the political philosophy of Deng Xiaoping, which supposedly prized pragmatism over doctrinal adherence to Marxist tenets — is being quickly reversed, with China's economy placed at the mercy of political leadership. Dengism was always treated with too much optimism by the West: The same regime supposedly pushing for detente with the West stole hundreds of billions in intellectual property every year for years while continuing to build up its military. Still, Xi has moved away from even tepid moves toward openness.

Trump is the only president of recent vintage to understand this simple truth. The Chinese regime is strengthening its totalitarianism; market forces have not opened up China's politics. China's attempts to strengthen its grip on Hong Kong, its forays into the complexities of Indian-Pakistani politics, its threats of sanctions against American firms over the sale of jets to Taiwan — all of this bespeaks the intent of the Xi Jinping regime, which has a philosophy of political revanchism. The supposed moderation

Two significant projects in recent years demonstrate the scale of China's ambitions. First, there's the so-called Belt and Road Initiative, in which China has helped subsidize building infrastructure in a bevy of countries throughout the world. Up to 68 countries are already taking part. The project is designed to place these countries in hock to the Chinese government; it's also designed to maximize China's naval power in the region.

Then there is China's heavy focus on government-subsidized building of 5G, using Huawei as the tip of the spear. China is offering 5G technology to developing countries at discounted prices, and those countries, hungry for the technology, have been accepting, likely at the cost of their own privacy and security. The goal, as always: maximization of China's sphere of influence.

Free trade isn't going to cure this. China's government has been willing to utilize mercantilism to prop up its global ambitions. Capitalism hasn't opened China's politics. Free trade has indeed benefitted China's citizens, bringing hundreds of millions out of poverty, but the Chinese government has responded with more repression, not less. All of which means that the United States must be pursuing a thorough strategy of opposition to China's ambitions.

Trump seems to understand this. But if he fails to articulate that to the American people, his economic war with China will fail. That's because if the American people are asked to shoulder an economic burden without being informed as to the rationale or the cost, they will rightly buck. Trump hasn't explained that the burden exists, let alone why the American people should shoulder it.

With that said, at least Trump recognizes the threat China represents. The chattering class has, for far too long, ignored that threat, to the detriment of the United States and her allies.

The meaning of Labor Day

For many of us, we just celebrated Labor Day weekend. Do all of you know the exact meaning of Labor Day? Let me share a few things I've learned through my research.

Labor Day in the United States of America is a public holiday celebrated on the first Monday in September. It honors the American labor movement and the contributions that workers have made to the development, growth, endurance, strength, security, prosperity, productivity, laws, sustainability, persistence, structure and well-being of this country. It is the Monday of the long weekend known as Labor Day Weekend. It is recognized as a Federal Holiday.

Labor Day was the idea of the brain child Peter J McGuire, a Vice President of the American Federation of Labor, who put forward the initial proposal in the Spring of 1882. In 1887 Oregon became the first state of the United States to make Labor Day an official public holiday. By the time it became an official Federal holiday in 1894, thirty U.S. States, the District of Columbia and the U.S. territories had subsequently made Labor Day a statutory holiday.

Labor Day is often called the "unofficial end of summer", because it marks the end of the cultural summer season. Many people take their two-week vacations at this time and many fall activities, such as school and sports begin about this time.

In fashion, Labor Day is (was) considered the last day when it was acceptable to wear white.

Labor Day has become an important weekend for discounts and allowances by many retailers in the United States, especially for back-to-school sales. Some retailers claim it is one of largest sale dates of the year, second only to the Christmas season's Black Friday.

How did you spend your Labor Day Weekend?

USDA-NIFA grant supports efforts to control viral diseases in swine

A $475,000 grant will help a Kansas State University research laboratory determine methods to control two of the most important viral agents in pigs: porcine reproductive and respiratory syndrome virus and swine influenza A virus.

Yunjeong Kim, associate professor of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology in the College of Veterinary Medicine, is the principal investigator on the grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture National Institute of Food and Agriculture. The project will focus on gaining a better understanding of protein disulfide isomerases enzymes as a potential target for developing intervention strategies against porcine reproductive and respiratory syndrome virus, or PRRSV, and swine influenza A virus, or SIAV.

"SIAV and PRRSV are two of the most important viral agents in pigs," Kim said. "Controlling these viruses is crucial for the swine production industry and sustained food supply, as well as for mitigating risks of potential pandemic influenza outbreaks in humans."

Kim said there is an unmet need for safe and effective prevention and control measures.

"Identification and manipulation of host factors critical for virus infection may provide the foundation for devising novel intervention strategies," Kim said. "Our group recently found that protein disulfide isomerases, which are involved in proper protein folding, play a key role for the replication of SIAV and PRRSV in cells by conducting experiments, including gene knockdown or CRISPR-based gene-editing technologies in cells."

The grant is titled "Investigation of genetic factors for swine influenza A virus and porcine reproductive and respiratory syndrome virus."

Approach, and be approachable

So you've finagled your way into a great networking event that may give you lots of great sales leads for your small business. How do you make the most of it?

Like anything else there are right ways and wrong ways, and one sure way to turn the opportunity into a disappointment is not to have the proper "buy in."

By "buy in" I mean you must have already come to the conclusion that this event is in fact an opportunity and that you intend to maximize it. If you don't have a commitment to your business and to the concept of using this event to help generate sales, you'll probably be out-shown by someone who has.

I knew a doctor once who worked for a small town hospital clinic. Management was trying hard to work its physicians into the fabric of the local community so people felt comfortable enough with them to become their patients. The guy was a fine physician but simply had no public relations skills and saw no value in having them. He felt like it was beneath him - "inauthentic" he told me once - to have to schmooze at the Rotary club in order to build his business. He had no "buy in" - no appreciation for the big plan and how the little plans contributed to the goal. He didn't last long.

So when you have the chance to network, do it right.
 1) Remember the tools. Have fresh new business cards (not the dog-eared ones from your wallet) in your shirt pocket or outside pocket of your purse where you can get to them quickly.

2) Bring your research. You've known about this event for a week or so - plenty of time to learn a little about why you're there, who's going to be there and what their interests are and what you have to offer - so you have some conversation points.

3) Remember the cues. Don't cross your arms; it says "don't approach me" to the people around you. Hold a pen in your hands or a cup or glass to give them something to do, or put your hands in your pockets if you have to in order to keep from crossing your arms. Don't sit unless you have to - staying on your feet makes you more mobile and more approachable to others.

4) Forget your nerves. You may think you're not the kind of person who can walk up to a stranger and introduce yourself, but you are. That's why you're there after all, and probably why the other person is there as well. And if you get "rejected" by a stranger, who cares? It's a stranger!

5) If someone approaches you with a "How are you" or a "What's up," etc., don't throw them in the "fine" swamp. Don't answer with "fine," answer with "Outstanding" or "Phenomenal!" or "Delicious" (well, if it's the right kind of event) - something that engenders follow up conversation. "Fine" is a dead-ender. It stands for Feelings I'm Not Expressing. It's what you say to someone you don't want to talk to.

So be ready with the right plan for your networking opportunity, and it can help you sell stuff!

Red light running deaths hit 10-year high across the nation

TOPEKA, Kan. – Aug. 29, 2019 – The number of people killed as the result of drivers running red lights has spiked sharply in recent years, according to analysis of crash data by the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety. And, more often than not (almost 65% of the time), the victim is not the offending driver.

"This disturbing trend impacts everyone on our roadways – drivers, passengers, cyclists and pedestrians," says Shawn Steward, spokesman for AAA Kansas. "It is critical that all parties understand this increased risk and adjust their behaviors accordingly."

"Defensive driving and limiting distractions is something we teach students of all ages every day," says Jennifer Shorette, the Director of AAA Driving Schools. "You cannot control the bad behavior of other drivers but you can change your own behavior to minimize risk."

Statistics indicate that red light running crash deaths jumped almost 30% between 2012 and 2017 – the most recent crash data available – with the aggressive, reckless behavior claiming at least 2 lives every day across the US.

The most recent crash data available shows 939 people were killed in red light running crashes in 2017 – a 10-year high.

"Drivers who decide to run a red light when they could have stopped safely are making a reckless choice that puts other road users in danger," said Dr. David Yang, executive director of the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety. "The data shows that red light running continues to be a traffic safety challenge. All road safety stakeholders must work together to change behavior and identify effective countermeasures."

Prevalent Behavior

According to the AAA

Foundation's latest Traffic Safety Culture Index, 85% of drivers view red light running as very dangerous, yet nearly one in three say they blew through a red light within the past 30 days when they could have stopped safely.

Red Light Running in Kansas

According to the AAA Foundation analysis of state data, Kansas has a slightly lower than average rate (2.2 per million) of red light running fatalities per year as compared to other states nationwide (2.4 per million). Kansas' fatality rate in red light running crashes ranks 20th highest in the nation. Kansas' neighboring states' rates include Colorado (3.5/M – 5th highest in the nation), Missouri (2.3/M), Nebraska (2/M) and Oklahoma (1.9/M).

In Kansas, there were more than 60 (63) people killed as the result of drivers running red lights over the 10-year period analyzed by the AAA Foundation (2008-2017).

To prevent red light crashes, Drive Defensively, #DontDriveIntoxicated and other tips from AAA:

Limit Distractions – previous AAA Foundation research indicates that driver distraction from, as an example, hands-free texting or dialing while sitting at a red light, can linger for up to 27 seconds after hitting send. Intersections require a driver's full attention. #DontDriveIntoxicated

Drive Defensively: Before you enter an intersection after the light has turned green for you, take a second after the light changes and look both ways before proceeding.

Prepare to Stop: Lift your foot off the accelerator and "cover the brake" when preparing to enter any intersection by positioning your right foot just above the brake pedal, without touching it.

Use Good Judgment: Monitor "stale" green lights, those that have been green a long time as you've approached the intersection. They are more likely to turn yellow as you arrive at the intersection.

Tap the Brakes: Tap your brakes a couple of times before fully applying them to slow down. This will catch the attention of drivers who may be inattentive or distracted behind you.

Pedestrians and cyclists should also stay safe when traveling near intersections. AAA recommends:

Wait: Give yourself a few seconds to make sure all cars have come to a complete stop before moving through the intersection.

Stay Alert and Listen: Don't take chances and don't wear headphones. Watch what is going on and give your full attention to the environment around you.

Be Visible: Stay in well-lit areas, especially when crossing the street.

Make Eye Contact: Look at drivers in stopped vehicles to ensure they see you before crossing the road in front of them.

K-State vet says corn on the cob no treat for dogs

MANHATTAN — Corn on the cob is a treat that many people enjoy each summer. But a Kansas State University veterinarian says don't share that cob with your dog.

While eating kernels of corn generally does not pose a health risk for most dogs, the corncob can be a problem if the dog ingests it, said Susan Nelson, veterinarian and clinical professor at the Veterinary Health Center, a part of the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine. Nelson said the problem is one veterinarians most often see in the summer and fall when corn on the cob is most popular.

"Dogs are attracted to corncobs due to the good-tasting corn kernels and the cob itself," Nelson said. "The cob is something they love to chew on, and while some dogs may chew it up into tiny pieces, others attempt to swallow it whole or swallow large pieces of the cob."

Swallowing the cob or pieces of the cob often causes a life-threatening obstruction of a dog's gastrointestinal tract, Nelson said, adding that the smaller the dog, the smaller the piece of cob that can cause this to happen. Corncobs also are not digestible, so if there is an obstruction of the gastrointestinal tract, abdominal surgery is usually needed to remove it.

"If smaller pieces of cob are in the stomach, they can sometimes be endoscopically removed," Nelson said. "But if dogs do not have the cob or pieces of cob causing the obstruction removed, it is usually fatal. Dogs that are brought to a veterinarian after they have been showing symptoms will also sometimes not survive, even with surgery."

Signs that your dog may have an obstruction caused by a piece of corncob or is experiencing other problems due to ingesting corn or corn on the cob include vomiting and/or dry heaves; diarrhea; straining to have a bowel movement; decreased or no appetite; a painful abdomen — or belly; lethargy or reluctance to play; or seeking seclusion. If you see any of these signs in your dog, Nelson said have it seen by a veterinarian immediately.

Nelson recommends keeping all corncobs safely away from dogs.

"Make sure the container in which you keep corncobs is in an area where dogs do not have access to or the cobs are in a secured container or locked cabinet," Nelson said. "Remember, dogs can be very good at opening doors, lids, etc."

If your dog does sneak a cob, take it away immediately, Nelson said. If the dog will not give up the cob or will try to bite you if you attempt to take it away, offer the dog an even more desirable treat or toy and then get the cob when the dog drops it to take the other offering.

While corncobs can be dangerous for dogs, corn itself is used as a protein source in many dog foods. Nelson said that contrary to popular belief, dogs can utilize nutrient sources that come from corn as their digestive tracts have evolved over the years to allow it because of their close association with humans and what we eat.

However, there are certain situations where corn can be problematic.

"If dogs have a corn allergy, which is not very common, then corn should be avoided," she said. "Corn that has added butter on it can put some dogs at risk for developing pancreatitis, which can be fatal in some circumstances. Corn with added salt can also be a problem for dogs with medical conditions such as congestive heart failure."

Nelson suggests not feeding your dog corn.

"If they learn to like corn, they will be more persistent at trying to get to it," she said. "But if you do decide to feed them corn, make sure to cut the kernels off the cob first, and only feed a small amount."
