Wet & muggy, but 'average'

Spate of muggy weather may be uncomfortable, not all that out-of-the-ordinary according to weather data

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – June's wet and muggy weather onslaught may have left area residents thinking 2021's been a different kind of weather year, but Garnett Industrial Airport Manager Pat Schettler said statistically speaking, it's really been pretty average.

"This year is actually pretty normal," Schettler said last week as the June weather recording books were closed at the airport. "Maybe a little higher temps, but no records."

Schettler said the average high temp last month was 86.4 degrees and the average low 66.7.

"I went back 12 years and the highest/lowest average high was 89.2 in 2020 and 81.7 in 2014," he said. "The highest/lowest average low was 68.8 in 2010 and 62.8 in 2019."

Schettler said the highest temperature in that time period was 103 degrees in 2012 and 45 in 2013.

"As far as rainfall, this year is on the higher side at 6.35 inches. The 12 year rainfall high was 7.74 inches (2010) and lowest was 1.60 inch (2012).

Anderson County and nearby counties were water logged in May according to the Kansas Climatology Office at Kansas State University, when a heavy rain pattern poured 8.23 inches on the county and notched 2.83 inches over May's average of 5.4 inches. Franklin County was the wettest in the region with 9.36 inches in May, 4.16 over its average 5.2 for the month.

Richmond Fair makes comeback this weekend

Large number of pre-entries, first-time exhibitors highlight fair's comeback from Covid 2020

BY PAT VINING THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

RICHMOND – Following an abbreviated fair last year due to COVID, officers of the Richmond Free Fair are expecting a roaring comeback for the 2021 event this weekend, July 8-10.

"We have a high number of pre-entries, including several first-time exhibitors," said 4-H Superintendent Laurinda Sobba, saying that is an excellent indication of a good fair.

Excluding last year, the fair usually has about 850 entries by about 200 exhibitors from five or six counties and sometimes several states, said Sr. Loretta Roeckers, who keeps such stats yearly.

Silent Auction items will be in the front (north) room of the Downtown Community Building all three days so visitors will have plenty of time to record their bids.

"Support of the Silent Auction is appreciated very much," said Sarah Peters, fair board president.

Peters noted the following major segments of this year's fair, and said the full schedule and any late news or updates would be available on the Richmond Free Fair Facebook Page.

- Athletic Events Thursday and Friday, 6 p.m.;
- Free Watermelon Feed for everyone both Thursday and Friday evenings at 7, provided by TT&T.
- Cowboy Olympics Thursday at 7 p.m., Open to all
- Old-time Games Friday at 7:30 p.m.
- Saturday: Children's Parade judged at 5:15 pm
- Grand Parade, 6 p.m. Theme – Keeping the Dream Alive

'Skeeters follow rains into summertime fun

City talks spraying; best way to prevent bugs is to dump standing water

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – With lots of summer rain oftentimes comes lots of mosquitoes – and Anderson County's had its fair share of rain lately.

Because they nest in standing water, recent rains in particular have meant lots of opportunity for a burgeoning population of 'skeeters in the area. Garnett Mayor Jody Cole told city commissioners at a recent city meeting she'd been approached by some constituents who were tired of being hemoglobin targets for the nasty critters, and wondered if the city could look into chemical fogging for the pests as is done in some other communities.

"It's something that was brought up, so I told them we would look into it," Cole said.

The discussion took place as the Kansas Department of Health & Environment urged Kansans to take preventive measures last week against mosquito bites over the July 4th holiday. KDHE said five of six regions in Kansas are now at the 'High' risk level for West Nile virus. Mosquito surveillance in Reno, Sedgwick, and Shawnee counties has shown an increase in Culex mosquitoes which can spread West Nile virus and other viruses that can affect humans and horses. This species of mosquitoes is most active at dawn and dusk.

City clerk Travis Wilson gave a handful of reports from area cities he'd contacted about their mosquito spraying programs. Spraying machines in towns that did their own spraying typically ran between $9,000 and $13,000, Wilson said, with chemical product running about $78 per gallon. He said as an example the City of Columbus sprayed about 2-4 times per month, a project that takes about five hours per spraying. Their costs ran about $8,000-$13,000 per summer, Wilson said, and those costs did include labor or overtime costs for city staff.

Commissioner Greg Gwin said he was interested in pursuing more information but was concerned about possible health issues from spraying chemicals, and whether a spraying program would have a significant impact on the problem.

"They seem to say if the mosquitoes fly through the spray, it works," Wilson said. "If they don't, then it doesn't."

Commissioners opted to seek some additional information from

A small but exuberant crowd gathered for Garnett's Independence Day parade Saturday morning, starting a day that continued through games and events in Lake Garnett Park, a free watermelon feed and culminating in a crowd of more than 450 vehicles from 25 Kansas counties and 11 states that attended Saturday night's LibertyFest Fireworks Display.

City budget talks reveal new openness law regarding tax increases

BY DANE HICKS THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW

GARNETT – Ongoing budget discussions among Garnett City Commissioners and city staff are proceeding under the reminder that future tax increases will require specific notices of tax impact to city property owners.

City manager Chris Weiner told commissioners at the commission's late June meeting that the 2022 budget now under development would be subject to a more advanced level of notification if it raised more tax revenue than the previous year, according to the provisions of the Truth In Taxation Act passed by the 2020 Kansas Legislature.

Weiner told commissioners future city budgets would be subject to a "revenue neutral" requirement – doesn't have to absorb any of those costs," he told commissioners. Garnett's adopted budget for 2021 is just under $15 million, up about 16 percent from a little over $13 million in the dozen years since 2010.

Governor Laura Kelly vetoed a similar bill last year but the overwhelming majority votes in the House and Senate may have been a factor in her decision to sign the bill and avoid a veto override. The Kansas House passed the bill 120-3 with a few modifications to the Senate bill that passed last January. Senators concurred with the House bill by a 30-5 vote.

The Kansas Policy Institute, a conservative tax policy lobby group, said the Kansas legislation was modeled after others in Utah and Tennessee.

What are you doing about your scars?

Sometimes God puts a subject back on my heart when I have already addressed it. Such is the case here. One of the things that Satan uses against us is our past. I have scars and you have scars we carry around with us. This is why Jesus says in Matthew 11:28, "Come to me, all you who are weary and burdened and I will give you rest." Part of the weariness and burden we carry about with us are the emotional scars that can be the result of bad decisions or many other causes. Our past scars cannot hurt us if we have a relationship with Jesus Christ. However if we choose to hang onto these scars that may have consequences which may be more detrimental than the original sin. They can make us feel dirty and unworthy, caused us to be depressed, defile our spirit, destroy our testimony and are a sin against God.

Be advised if you choose to hang on to your scars and you have a personal relationship with Jesus all or part of these things can still control your life. You will never achieve victory in Jesus. Jesus has forgiven you based on your receiving him as your personal Savior. Even more grievous than this is the fact you will be holding yourself to a higher standard than God does. Do not fall into this trap. One of the most heartfelt passages in scripture is Psalm 51. This is David's confession after his adulterous relationship with Bathsheba. All of the things that I mentioned are at work in David's life. He says, "My transgressions are always before me, cleanse me, do not cast me from your presence, save me from blood guilt." All this from a man who Samuel the prophet calls "a man after God's own heart."

WEEKLY DEVOTIONAL

BY DAVID BILDERBACK

When we choose to let our past rule us in spite of our relationship with Jesus Christ I believe we break God's heart. So what shall we do to control our feelings? God says to Isaiah the prophet concerning the people, "Come now let us reason together, says the LORD. Though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they are red as crimson, they shall be like wool." Take that verse and commit it to memory knowing you have been forgiven by a loving God who is willing to cast your past into the ocean and remember it no more. That is a big step in achieving the rest Jesus promises in Matthew 11.

Creatively holding their ground

In helping numerous rural communities throughout Kansas mount their defense against the invasion of wind farms, my partners and I used to pose the rhetorical question "Why don't you see any wind farms in Johnson County?"

The answer? Because Johnson County has a way of pushing its eyesores off to its rural neighbors.

Now some folks up in Miami County have learned an appreciation for having their beautiful rural environs spoiled by industrial splatter – and they're willing to go so far as to form a new city in northern Miami County to stop it.

They're hoping to charter the city of "Golden" and set up their own city boundaries and government in order to protect themselves from the sprawl of southwestern Johnson County's Certainly it's a matter of taste; if everybody wanted a city vista, everyone would live in town.

Logistics Park intermodal facility. Earlier this year the Edgerton City Council approved the rezoning of 700 acres of rural land into industrial use, so they can make ready for the continued expansion of the intermodal which needs land – lots of land – with the buildings and roads and pavement it entails.

That's not what the prospective residents of Golden had in mind when they took up residence outside the urban ring of Kansas City, so they're taking big steps to put an end to it.

It's the classic clash of American cultures – folks who want to sit on their porch and enjoy a sunset over a field of corn or soybeans running headlong into urbanites and government officials who want development and bigger tax bases and jobs. Every urban area has the boundary between the two, and cities with a constant appetite for annexation are often responsible for pushing that borderline against the neighbors.

Invasion isn't too strong a word to use. Those of us who live in rural areas those those locales specifically for the anti-urban amenities they offer. Certainly it's a matter of taste; if everybody wanted a city vista, everyone would live in town. But when the interests of those homeowners clash with policies to expand urban facilities, rural landowners have learned there's hardly any room to compromise; and even if you do, the threat never really goes away.

Rural residents in Kansas who've fought wind farm developments over the past decade of their tax incentive-fueled cancerous spread can sympathize. Peaceful rural scenes all over the state have been marred by the industrial ugliness of these "green" energy producers, and the affront is compounded by the fact that those tens of millions of dollars in machinery and facilities pay not a dime in local property taxes.

The downside is that the creativity which may lead to the charter of Golden won't work in most cases in rural Kansas where residents are combating turbine farms. That's because wind developers target counties that don't have existing rural zoning in place or at least have loose restrictions that oftentimes don't address turbine field developments.

That lack of protection for the residents allows the slick wind salesmen to massage county commissioners with wild tales of economic development promises, money for lease signers and 'Payments In Lieu of Taxes' – the petty bribes promised to local government intended to replace the millions they would otherwise get in property tax revenues if turbine fields were taxed like other power plants. Residents whose counties don't have an existing zoning plan are sitting ducks.

But the illustration is clear when it's focused on another example. People who've chosen to live in the country for its innate rural value have a right to fight back when somebody – intermodal or wind farms – try to take it. ###

While other countries militaries focus on becoming more lethal, better at killing the enemy, our military, under the Biden Administration, focuses on gay pride. America, that ought to scare the hell out of you. Thank you.

I can only hope the person who needs to see this will, though they probably will not. So now the foul-mouthed sprinter in the Olympics doesn't get to go to the Olympics with the USA team because she tested positive for pot. What a shame to make it to the Olympics and have it all go to pot over smoking weed. Even though she's trashy and a pothead, if she's willing to respect her country even a little bit I'd still rather have her on the team than the flag hating hammer thrower who said she wants to burn the American Flag while on the

Kansas' big government costs us big money

Kansas has some of the highest property taxes in the nation, largely because we are massively over-governed.

Kansas has 1,993 general purpose governments – cities, counties, and townships – serving about 2.9 million people. That works out to 1,461 residents per government entity, whereas the national average is 8,448 per entity, and that's the third-worst rate in the country.

Data for the number of employees and units of government comes from the U.S. Census Bureau and is published for each state in KPI's 2021 Green Book.

For perspective, there would be 1,648 fewer cities, counties, and townships at the national average of people per entity. Here's another fun way to think of it: Kansas has almost six times the number of cities, counties, and townships than the national average on a per-capita basis. Kansas is ranked #48 among the states, with only North Dakota and South Dakota being worse.

Having a lot more cities, counties, and townships means there are also many more local government employees than the national average – 35% more to be exact. In fact, there would be 38,000 fewer local government employees here if Kansas local governments were staffed at the national average of employees per capita.

Kansas is the second-worst state for local government employees per capita (Wyoming is the worst).

KANSAS COMMENTARY

DAVE TRABERT, KANSAS POLICY INSTITUTE

We also have excess state government employees per capita. Kansas has 37% more than the national average on this measurement and is ranked #38.

With combined state and local government employment, Kansas is #48 in the nation; only Alaska and Wyoming are worse.

Nebraska is almost as bad – ranked #47 – but every other state in the region has much lower levels of government employees per capita.

By population we have an excessive number of school districts in Kansas.

We have an average of 1,740 students per district based on Census data for headcount enrollment – less than half the national average of 3,769 students per district. At the national average, Kansas would have 132 school districts – that's 154 fewer school districts. Keep in mind, this doesn't mean fewer school buildings, students, or teachers. It would mean fewer administrators, less overhead, and streamlined operations.

Some people try to excuse Kansas being massively over-governed on geography, but that theory is not supported by the facts. Some states have always had one school district per county. Hawaii has one district for the entire state.

Every state with more land mass than Kansas has fewer general purpose governments than Kansas (Alaska, Texas, California, Montana, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, Wyoming, Oregon, Idaho, and Utah).

And the Golden Rule of government spending applies: the more government, the more government employees, the higher the property taxes.

Kansas has some of the highest effective property tax rates in the nation, and a lot of that is because Kansas is so massively over-governed. For example, if the average all-in cost (pay plus benefits) is $50,000 for the Trump decision on 2024 will set Republican stage

Sometime in 2023, Donald Trump will presumably make the most momentous decision by a single person affecting the fate of the Republican Party in decades.

He will decide whether to run for president again, and that will determine who's the front-runner (Trump, if he's a go) and the contours of the race.

If Trump runs, he will, one assumes, blot out the sun. Everything will be about him -- his record, his pronouncements, his animosities. Much of the conservative mass media will get on board, while the mainstream media -- inadvertently aiding him, yet again -- will be even more intensely hostile.

The choice between this and a more "normal" nomination battle is Trump's alone.

Perhaps not since Dwight Eisenhower turned aside Harry Truman's entreaties to run for president as a Democrat and threw his hat in the ring as a Republican has someone had such "yea or nay" influence over the nation's politics.

Trump's continued sway has been a boon to his most hardcore cadre, but it is a problem for Trumpism, at least if that term is to mean anything more than personal loyalty to him. In particular, his staying power risks overshadowing and distorting the development of the populist wing of the party, which should be about more than "Stop the Steal" and adherence to one man, even if that man has defied political gravity.

Trump lost last November and contributed more than his share to the Georgia Senate losses that have added trillions of dollars to what Joe Biden can plausibly spend.

He no longer has any formal power, whereas six months ago he could move aircraft carrier groups.

He's off social media and is not nearly as omnipresent on traditional media as when he was holding impromptu press conferences on his way to Marine One.

And yet, his grip on the party has barely loosened, if at all.

Why?

Most important, he avoided the stigma of a loser by falsely claiming he really won.

He connected with his voters at a cultural level deeper than any of his policies, creating an enduring bond.

His voters still think he's the only one who truly gets the threat from the left, and the only one willing to fight with the requisite ferocity. Finally, they think Trump is being persecuted by social media companies and worry they could be next.

The lesson of the defenestration of Liz Cheney is that you can't run headlong into these sentiments and expect to survive in leadership.

Mitch McConnell, who has made his disdain for Trump clear, has taken the more prudent course of declining to elaborate on his well-known views, and isn't going anywhere. But there's no doubt that what it means to be a populist in the Trump mode is overly determined by Trump himself.

Until recently, Elise Stefanik was a moderate Republican from New York state. She became the alternative to Cheney for the party's populists by toeing the line on Stop the Steal, an issue that isn't liberal, conservative or populist, but pure Trump.

The Trump effect is stark in Ohio Republican politics. One would think Rep. Anthony Gonzalez, a featured speaker last year at an event of the populist policy shop American Compass, would have more populist credibility than Senate primary candidate Josh Mandel, a run-of-the-mill establishment Republican. Yet Gonzalez voted to impeach Trump, so Mandel is earning populist points by calling him a "traitor."

On the other hand, another likely Senate candidate, J.D. Vance, who represents a sin-38,000 extra local government employees, taxpayers are paying $1.9 billion in extra tax.

Put differently, a $1.9 billion reduction in property tax revenue for schools, cities, counties, and other local taxing jurisdictions equates to a 37% reduction in property tax.

Property taxes can be reduced if taxpayers demand that local officials provide services at lower cost. KPI's Better Service, Better Prices study shows how local governments across the nation are able to provide services at lower costs. A few examples include:

Share services across multiple government entities, both within a county and across several counties in a region.

Privatize and outsource services that do not have to be performed by government employees.

Take advantage of retirement and turnover to reduce staff.

These proven solutions would make this state a much more competitive state. Our 2021 Green Book explores the relationship between the size of government and economic growth, and the takeaway is crystal clear – states that spend less, tax less...and create a lot more jobs.

Colony Christian Church - Completing the First Mission"

Brant McGhee gave the Communion Meditation this week over the term "Simple". The word simple means that something is easily understood or done, uncomplicated, straight forward, easy, etc. Acts 2:38 calls us to repent and be baptized and we'll receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Repenting can either be hard or easy. What determines the difference is our desire. We need to learn to trust and cast our cares on Jesus. And God wants us to be happy. He has done it all for us, he's done the hard part. He already has the outline figured out, all we have to do is be obedient. Believe ~ Trust ~ Follow

Pastor Chase Riebel gave the sermon "Completing the First Mission" over Acts 14. When we spread the Good News, we must keep 5 things in mind: 1. Don't give up!, 2. Look for Faith, 3. Don't get a big head, 4. Don't be passive, and 5. Don't hide the suffering.

When Paul and Barnabas were spreading the Good News, the Jews created a mob and ran them out of town. But their desire was to please God by saving people. We need to make sure that we are eternally-minded and renew our spirits in Jesus every day. We should look about us and see faith in others and tap into it. The suffering, bleeding lady in Matthew 5 knew that if she could just touch Jesus' robe, she would be healed. Such faith!!! But always give the glory to God. We can only plant the seed, God is the one who will bring in the harvest, so we must live humbly. And stand in the gap for those who are struggling. We must be assertive and not passive when it comes to sharing Jesus with others. Not necessarily aggressive, but assertive. which have had similar property tax transparency in place for over 30 years. Kansas is now the third state in the nation with property tax transparency. KPI's primer on the new law said when new property values are set this year, mill levies will automatically be reduced so that the new valuations bring in the same dollar amount of property tax to cities, counties, and school districts as in 2020. If local officials want to increase the revenue-neutral mill levy, they must notify citizens of their intent, hold a public hearing to accept input, and then vote on the entire property tax increase they impose. The new law also does away with the so-called property tax lid, which required public approval to increase property tax by more than inflation. The lid was rendered almost meaningless, however, by a long list of exemptions that allowed cities and counties to avoid the public vote requirement. The Truth in Taxation law has no exemptions. KPI said property taxes in Kansas increased far more than the rate of inflation over the last 23 years. The average county increased property taxes by 180% between 1997 and 2020, while inflation was 53% and the population grew by just 11%.

Capitalism and Conservation

Greg Doering, Kansas Farm Bureau

The big story in agriculture today is how carbon is going to be the next cash crop for farmers and ranchers. There are lots of headlines about how changing agricultural practices can remove carbon dioxide from the air and store it in the soil.

While the science is sound, farming practices are just one component in the complex process of accumulation of carbon in the soil. Precipitation, soil type, carbon already present and other variables all factor into just how much of the element can be sequestered underground.

What's grabbing attention is there's a nascent market blooming where private companies are paying real money to farmers and ranchers who can document increasing stores of carbon in their soils. The idea is the ag producers get some money for changing their practices while the private companies count the sequestered carbon against their own emissions.

There's a variety of reasons why companies are at the forefront of creating this market, but the primary driver is capitalism. Environmentally conscious customers and investors are demanding goods and services that have less impact on the land, air and water. Companies are responding to these signals by turning to the original conservationists — farmers and ranchers — to lessen the environmental impact of modern life.

The public at large is just now discovering what crop and livestock growers have understood for decades — capitalism and conservation are complimentary and not mutually exclusive. Farmers and ranchers understand today's investments in healthy soil, pristine air and crystal-clear water will pay dividends for generations to come.

Farmers and ranchers today are using technology and innovative practices to produce more than ever while using fewer resources. U.S. agriculture would have needed nearly 100 million more acres 30 years ago to match today's production levels.

This is especially true of livestock, which receive a lot of attention for greenhouse gases expelled yet contribute just 4 percent — and falling — of overall emissions. The dairy industry is producing 48 percent more milk with per-unit emissions down 26 percent. Pork production has soared 80 percent while the per-unit emissions have declined by 20 percent. Beef production is up 18 percent and emissions down 8 percent.

These efficiencies are driven by simple economics. Livestock emissions are falling because inputs like land and feed are expensive, so producers have a natural incentive to make the most of their resources. In short, market forces are working as they should, and U.S. agriculture is lessening its environmental footprint in addition to offsetting the carbon emissions from other industries.

For the most part, this has happened in the absence of government mandates, but that's not to say government policy doesn't have a role in further reducing the greenhouse gas emissions from agriculture.

No, the government shouldn't tell farmers and ranchers how to do their jobs, but policy makers can certainly craft incentive-based programs to speed the adoption of practices that enhance production and profitability on farms and ranches.

Legislators also can reduce regulatory barriers in state and federal programs and fund basic research that will help farmers and ranchers achieve greater efficiencies and further enhance the sustainability of their operations.

While the government can help facilitate the pace of adoption on proven practices, it should also recognize what works in one field isn't always the prescription for the next. We have to trust farmers and ranchers, with decades and generations of land management experience, know the capacity of their ground. They're proven innovators and problem solvers in their own right.

And they're just as invested as the rest of us in successful and sustainable conservation all while continuing to provide a safe, affordable and ample supply of food for a growing population.

"Insight" is a weekly column published by Kansas Farm Bureau, the state's largest farm organization whose mission is to strengthen agriculture and the lives of Kansans through advocacy, education and service.

KART Racing: Fun for the whole family

The weekend of July 10 & 11 the city of Garnett welcomes the first Kart road race of the season. The Garnett KART Club, which has been hosting races since 1957, will once again bring racing to the North Lake Park road course. The racing schedule runs from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. both Saturday and Sunday.

For over 60 years the Garnett Karting Clubs have been hosting both road and sprint track races, including 3 national events. Each racing event garners 100 to 125 entries and involves people from many states across the country.

KART racing is a great spectator sport. The North Lake Park is unique in that it provides a free viewing site on the south side of the road course (near park entrance), or for only $20 for adults, this pass is good for two days and the family can access the pit area located on the east side of Lake Garnett for a truly "awesome" view of the road course. In the pits you can watch the crews work on their karts and learn more about this motor sport, and then watch the racers as they sprint down the west side straight-away exceeding 100 mph, maneuver the chicane made of hay bales, cross the dam and fight nose to tail for position around tight corners surrounding Lake Garnett.

The likes of Jamie McMurray and Kevin Harvick, both well-known in the NASCAR circuit, raced at Lake Garnett. KART racing has sharpened the skills of such racers as Mario Andretti, Al Unser, Terry LaBonte and Ricky Rudd.

The real heroes of this sport for us, however, are the members of the Garnett Kart Club, who have given years of their time and energy to improving race facilities, promoting these events and bringing hundreds of racers and fans to our community. We invite you to show your support and admiration of their dedication by attending the races on July 10-11. For more information about KART Racing in Garnett, please contact Bryan at (785) 304-9701 or Mike at (785) 448-8899

Peters said the fair board hopes friends and family will come out and support the 4-H members as they have in previous years.

"The Richmond Fair gives 4-H members the opportunity to show their entries of all kinds before going to county competition. They (members and their families) tell us over and over they appreciate this chance to prepare for further competition, and we try to make this a good experience for them."

Open Doors at U. M. Church continues with additions

Those who attend the Richmond Free Fair are invited to walk across the street to the United Methodist Church to enjoy Open Doors again this year. Hours are 4-8 each evening.

"There are a couple of additions this year," said chairperson Cathy Parsons, "yet there will be displays that are interesting and a bit entertaining as in previous years." Cathy is being assisted by Carol Reekie, Marsha Christman and Nancy Burroughs. Mary and Arlen Hall, who started the event 17 years ago have retired from leadership positions.

If you would like to display a hobby, collection, or favorite whatever you might have, bring it to the church Wednesday, July 7th, from 1-4 o'clock or make arrangements with Parsons. Those with displays should have their own posters or signs, she added.

A couple of additions this year are a children's Story Time on Thursday and Friday, drop in from 4-6 p.m. at the church library (east entrance). Stories will be read by Pastor Lenise Eddings and Lois Hobbs.

Main Street Richmond, a narrated PowerPoint program, will be given by Dennis Peters Friday and Saturday at 10 a.m. in the sanctuary. Peters has researched Richmond's buildings extensively and has much information to share about buildings both past and present. All are welcome.

Some of the displays expected this year include quilts by Carol Reekie, afghans by Janice Cooper-Rodriguez, photography by Pam Peters, items from Sr. Loretta, paintings by Mary Hall, almanacs by Lorene Stockard, Frankoma pottery by Pat Vining, and more. What can you add to this variety of collections?

The Richmond Museum will bring several albums of pictures and stories, including notebooks recently given to the Museum by Patriots Bank. One book that is sure to be popular is Dorothy (Kipper) Lickteig's "Gleanings about Richmond" book of reprinted newspaper stories.

There will be cold water available and chairs to rest in aid-conditioning, so for an enjoyable break, come to Open Doors at the United Methodist Church.

The event was begun 17 years ago as a way for the church to add to the fair, offer an opportunity for fun displays (no competition) and provide a break from the usually hot fair-time weather.

THE ANDERSON COUNTY REVIEW 7-6-2021 / SUBMITTED

Quilts at 'Open Doors' this year will include this one made by Carol (Guy) Reekie of Ottawa, formerly of Richmond.

Richmond Museum open daily, features model tractors

Just across the street west of the fair, the Richmond Community Museum will be open daily 2-8 and offer cold bottled water, air-conditioning, and many interesting things to see if you want to take a break from the fair, said President Mary Tooley.

Especially interesting to some folks is the display of about 30 model tractors, each matched with the name of a farmer in the area who had the same model working tractor. Former resident Marvin Gretencord, now of Olathe, collected the tractors and other items in the display and enjoys sharing them.

There are several other new items, albums and neat things to see, all looking good under new LED lights and some other improvements.

In May 2021, a plaque was placed over the guest register that honors the original 6 members of the Richmond Museum Board, which was founded in 2005. Those members are Robert Cooper, Marvin Duvall, Nadine Peine, Nadine Poss and Phyllis Rossman.

These persons are now deceased but their leadership is still greatly appreciated.

Come to the Museum to rest, cool off, and see some new things! It's always free at the Richmond Museum.

Special PowerPoint program about Richmond's Main Street buildings

On Friday, July 9, and Saturday, July 10, there will be a presentation at the United Methodist Church in the sanctuary. It will be a narrated PowerPoint program by Dennis Peters about the buildings on Richmond's main Street.

Everyone is welcome to attend. The program is sponsored by the Richmond Community Museum.

Kuesers 2021 Richmond Free Fair parade marshals

The Richmond Free Fair is pleased to honor Dean and Pat Kueser as fair parade marshals this year. They have welcomed hundreds of folks to share their shady front yard, as the visitors enjoy the games and parade, for a long time.

The Kuesers have lived in the former Methodist Church parsonage since 1973 and have always been glad to have a yard full of people on fair days.

Dean and Pat were married in 1968 and lived in Illinois while he was in the military. This is the first and only house they have owned, and they have many happy memories raising their family here, but also of large crowds on fair days.

They have visiting grandchildren at fair time too. Zoie, 14, and Eliza, 11, Prothe, whose mom is Rhonda. The kids enter 4-H foods, clothing, and crafts and enjoy the games and other activities, often entering the children's parade.

"They really enjoy the fair," said Pat. "They meet new kids and have lots of fun."

Dean's fair memories go back many years to when he used to help put up the tents which were used before the Community Building was built in 1972, followed by other buildings over the years. He remembers 'Marsh', who owned the rental tents, so do many others.

After returning to Richmond, Dean worked at Ottawa Truck for 25 years and helped build those big rigs you see parked on the north end of Ottawa. Pat had a short walk to her job at Patriots Bank for 35 years. Both retired in 2013.

Through the years Dean and Pat have put alot of effort into landscaping and making their yard one of the best looking in town, quite likely the top one, but are quick to say they are happy to share it with others. They appreciate that some people thank them as they leave. Often, fair board members help pick up any trash that's left.

It's been a good relationship for 47 years with the Kuesers and was before they lived there, so certainly is sure to continue.

A sincere huge "Thank You" to Dean and Pat Kueser for sharing their good-looking lawn with the good folks who come to watch the fair games and parade every year. It is sincerely appreciated.

professional pest control companies and to try to spread the word to local residents to dump objects that might have collected water during recent rains to keep from providing nesting areas for the bugs.

Mosquitoes don't actually suck blood for food - adults feed mostly on nectar, which makes them important as pollinators - but females need blood to lay healthy eggs. An expert's segment at thisoldhouse.com gives a number of tips about controlling mosquitoes, including:

- dumping any outdoor containers that might collect water and provide nesting areas;
• if they're in your house at night, you can darken the house and turn on a small light - they'll be attracted to it and can be dispatched;
• repellants with 30%-50% DEET are effective. So are citronella or lavender candles;
• mosquitoes don't fly well in the wind, so turning on a fan is a good method for keeping them away;
• bug zappers and mosquito traps also work, and pools and ponds can be treated with BTI, a naturally occurring bacterium found in soil. It produces toxins that target and kill mosquito larvae. You can spray it over ponds, flower pots, and bird baths, and it's non-toxic to humans.

KU chapter of Phi Beta Kappa announces 2020, 2021 inductees

LAWRENCE — The University of Kansas Alpha chapter of Phi Beta Kappa academic honor society recently initiated 153 new members in a joint ceremony for 2020 and 2021.

David Slusky, president of KU's Phi Beta Kappa chapter and associate professor of economics, presided at the virtual ceremony in May. The national secretary and CEO of Phi Beta Kappa, Frederick Lawrence, was a guest speaker. Jennifer Harrison, vice president of the chapter and director of the Business Leadership Program and the Jack Dicus Business Honors Program; Dietrich Earnhart, professor of economics and chapter historian, and Anne Wallen, secretary-treasurer and director of the Office of Fellowships, welcomed and congratulated the new initiates. Students received certificates and signed the register by appointment to allow for social distancing.

Sarah Crawford-Parker, director of the University Honors Program, was inducted as an honorary member of the chapter and gave an address on the value of the liberal arts and sciences.

Sam Steuart, a 2020 graduate and 2019 inductee, and Laura Phillips, a 2021 graduate and 2020 inductee, gave the student responses on the Phi Beta Kappa value of friendship.

Election to Phi Beta Kappa recognizes a student's high academic achievement while pursuing a broad and substantive liberal arts curriculum. To be eligible for consideration for membership, students must be graduating seniors with a minimum grade-point average of 3.65 on a 4.0 scale, or be juniors with a minimum 3.9. Anonymous transcripts of candidates are reviewed holistically by a committee of Phi Beta Kappa faculty and staff members. For 2020, 47 seniors and 20 juniors were initiated. For 2021, 58 seniors and 28 juniors were initiated.

Locally 2020 Senior Gwendolyn Sibley, Garnett, was initiated as a new member of Phi Beta Kappa.
